

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

Invisible Penitence 1

PART I ◆

Paradise Is Where I Am 7

ONE

Life as a Dream and a Lie 9

TWO

The Golden Age and After? 27

THREE

The Disciplines of Beatitude 39

PART II ◆

The Kingdom of the Lukewarm, or The Invention of Banality 67

FOUR

The Bittersweet Saga of Dullness 69

FIVE

The Extremists of Routine 84

SIX

Real Life Is Not Absent 106

PART III ❖

The Bourgeoisie, or The Abjection of Well-Being 129

SEVEN

“The Fat, Prosperous Elevation of the Average, the Mediocre” 131

EIGHT

What Is Happiness for Some Is Kitsch for Others 149

NINE

If Money Doesn’t Make You Happy, Give It Back! 163

PART IV ❖

Unhappiness Outlawed? 181

TEN

The Crime of Suffering 183

ELEVEN

Impossible Wisdom 206

CONCLUSION

Madame Verdurin’s Croissant 227

INDEX 233

INTRODUCTION

Invisible Penitence

In 1738 the young Mirabeau sent a letter to his friend Vauvenargues, reproaching him for living from day to day without having any plan for achieving happiness: “See here, my friend, you think all the time, you study, and nothing is beyond the scope of your ideas; and yet you never think for a moment about making a clear plan leading to what should be our only goal: happiness.” He went on to list for his skeptical correspondent the principles that guided his own conduct: ridding himself of prejudices, preferring gaiety to moodiness, following his inclinations and at the same time purifying them.<sup>1</sup> We may laugh at this juvenile enthusiasm. Mirabeau, who was the child of a time that thought it could reinvent the human being and do away with the plagues of the Old Regime, was concerned about his happiness the way people before him had been concerned about the salvation of their souls.

Have we changed that much? Consider today’s Mirabeaus—young people of all backgrounds and opinions, anxious to begin a new era and move beyond the ruins of the frightening twentieth century. They launch out into life eager to exercise their rights and first of all to construct their lives as they see fit, sure that each of them has been promised everything. From their infancy they have been told: Be happy, because nowadays we no longer have children in order to transmit to them values or a spiritual heritage but rather to increase the number of fully realized individuals on Earth.

<sup>1</sup> Quoted in Robert Mauzi, L’idée de bonheur dans la littérature et la pensée française au XVIIIe siècle (Paris: Albin Michel, 1965; rpt. Geneva: Slatkine, 1979), pp. 261–262.

Be happy! Beneath this apparently amiable injunction, is there another, more paradoxical, more terrible? The commandment is all the more difficult to elude because it corresponds to no object. How can we know whether we are happy? Who sets the norm? Why do we have to be happy, why does this recommendation take the form of an imperative? And what shall we reply to those who pathetically confess: "I can't"?

In short, for our young people, this privilege quickly comes a burden: seeing themselves as solely responsible for their dreams and their successes, they find that the happiness they desire so much recedes before them as they pursue it. Like everybody else, they dream of a wonderful synthesis that combines professional, romantic, moral, and family success, and beyond each of these, like a reward, perfect satisfaction. As if the self-liberation promised by modernity were supposed to be crowned by happiness, as the diadem placed atop the whole process. But this synthesis is deferred as they elaborate it, and they experience the promise of enchantment not as a blessing but as a debt owed a faceless divinity whom they will never be able to repay. The countless miracles they were supposed to receive will trickle in randomly, embittering the quest and increasing the burden.

They are angry with themselves for not meeting the established standard, for infringing the rule. Mirabeau could still dream, conceive unrealistic projects. Three centuries later, the rather lofty ideal of an Enlightenment aristocrat has been transformed into penitence. We now have every right except the right not to be blissful.

◆ There is nothing more vague than the idea of happiness, that old prostituted, adulterated word so full of poison that we would like to exclude it from the language. Since antiquity, it has been nothing but the history of its contradictory and successive meanings: in his time, St. Augustine already counted no less than 289 differing opinions on the subject, the eighteenth century devoted almost 50 treatises to it, and we are constantly projecting onto earlier periods or other cultures a conception and obsession that belongs solely to our own. It is in the nature of this notion to be an enigma, a permanent source of debates, a fluid that can take every form, but which no form exhausts. There is a happiness of action and another of contemplation, a happiness of the mind and another of the senses, a happiness of prosperity and another of deprivation, a happiness of virtue and another of crime. Theories of happiness, Diderot said, are always only the histories of those who formulate them. Here, we are interested in a different kind of history: that of the desire to be happy as a passion peculiar to the West since the French and American revolutions.

The project of being happy encounters three paradoxes. Its object is so vague that it becomes intimidating because of its imprecision. It leads to boredom or apathy as soon it is realized (in this sense, the ideal happiness would be one that was always satisfied and always arising anew, thus avoiding the double trap of frustration and satiety). Finally, it avoids suffering to the point of being helpless when it occurs.

In the first case, the very abstraction of happiness explains its seductive power and the anguish it produces. Not only are we wary of prefabricated paradises, but we are never sure that we are truly happy. When we wonder whether we are happy, we are already no longer happy. Hence the infatuation with this state is also connected with two attitudes, conformism and envy, the conjoint ailments of democratic culture: a focus on the pleasures sought by the majority and attraction to the elect whom fortune seems to have favored.

In the second case, the concern about happiness in its secular form is contemporary in Europe with the advent of banality, a new temporal system that was set up at the dawn of the modern age and that sees secular life, reduced to its prosaic form, triumphing after the withdrawal of God. Banality or the victory of the bourgeois order: mediocrity, platitude, vulgarity.

Finally, seeking to eliminate pain nonetheless puts it at the heart of the system. As a result, today we suffer from not wanting to suffer just as one can make oneself ill by trying to be perfectly healthy. Furthermore, we now tell ourselves a strange fable about a society completely devoted to hedonism, and for which everything becomes an irritation, a torture. Unhappiness is not only unhappiness; it is, worse yet, a failure to be happy.

◆ By the duty to be happy, I thus refer to the ideology peculiar to the second half of the twentieth century that urges us to evaluate everything in terms of pleasure and displeasure, a summons to a euphoria that makes those who do not respond to it ashamed or uneasy. A dual postulate: on the one hand, we have to make the most of our lives; on the other, we have to be sorry and punish ourselves if we don't succeed in doing so. This is a perversion of a very beautiful idea: that everyone has a right to control his own destiny and to improve his life. How did a liberating principle of the Enlightenment, the right to happiness, get transformed into a dogma, a collective catechism? That is the process we will try to trace here.

The supreme Good is defined in so many different ways that we end up attaching it to a few collective ideals—health, the body, wealth, comfort, well-being—talismans upon which it is supposed to land like a bird upon bait. Means become ends and reveal their insufficiency as soon as the delight sought fails to materialize. So that by a cruel mistake, we often move farther away from happiness by the same means that were supposed to allow us to approach it. Whence the frequent mistakes made with regard to happiness: thinking that we have to demand it as our due, learn it like a subject in school, construct it the way we would a house; that it can be bought, converted into monetary terms, and finally that others procure it from a reliable source and that all we have to do is imitate them in order to be bathed in the same aura.

Contrary to a commonplace that has been tirelessly repeated ever since Aristotle (although in his work the term had a different meaning), it is not true that everyone seeks happiness, which is a Western idea that appeared at a certain point in history. There are other ideas—freedom, justice, love, friendship—that can take precedence over happiness. How can we say what all people have sought since the dawn of time without slipping into hollow generalities? I am opposing not happiness but the transformation of this fragile feeling into a veritable collective drug to which everybody is supposed to become addicted in chemical, spiritual, psychological, digital, and religious forms. The most elaborate wisdom and sciences have to confess their inability to guarantee the felicity of peoples and individuals. Felicity, every time it touches us, produces a feeling of having received a grace, a favor, not that of a calculation, a specific mode of behavior. And perhaps we experience the good things of the world, opportunities, pleasures, and good fortune to the degree that we have abandoned the dream of attaining Beatitude with a capital letter.

To the young Mirabeau, we would like to reply: “I love life too much to want to be merely happy!”

INDEX

- accident, 211
acedia, 85–86
Act Up, 203, 203n13 adversity, as human need, 206–208 advertising, 47–48, 173
AIDS, 213–214, 219; societal response to, 198–200
Alain (Émile-Auguste Chartier), 57; Propos sur le bonheur, 42, 184
Alcoholics Anonymous, 197–198
Almodóvar, Pedro, 158
Americans, as utilitarians, 75
American way of life, in work of Fitzgerald, 168–169
Amiel, Henri-Frédéric, 87–90, 92–93, 120 ancients, and refutation of suffering, 185–186, 186n2, 219 anesthesia, culture of, 210 animal rights, 190
anteriority, principle of, 147 antibourgeois sentiment, 131–136, 140–143, 145–146 anticapitalist sentiment, 145–146 anxiety, over health, 52–55
Aquinas, St. Thomas, 11, 86
Aragon, Louis, Paysan de Paris, 118n5
Arendt, Hannah, 132
Ariès, Philippe, 184, 187, 221
Aristotle, 6, 149–150, 171, 178, 220 armistices, temporary, with suffering, 219–224 artist, bourgeois as, 142 art of enduring, 224 art of living, 224
asceticism, 90
athletes, 210
Attali, Jacques, 146
Aubenque, Pierre, 82n3
Augustine of Hippo, St., 3, 10, 12, 18, 71; Confessions, 86
Auschwitz, 22, 139, 139n10 automatic writing, 119 autonomy, and will, 210
Bacon, Francis, New Atlantis, 28 bad luck, 61–62
bad taste. See vulgarity Balzac, Honoré de, L'Histoire des Treize, 116 banality, 4, 165–166; abolition of, 115–120; birth of, 70–74; embrace of, 87–90; martyrs of, 84–86; and repetitiveness of everyday life, 76–83; and secularism, 69–70. See also boredom baptism, of newborn, 20
bhāra, 105
Barthes, Roland, 95
Bataille, Georges, 218

- Bauby, Jean-Dominique, 214, 218
Baudelaire, Charles, 77–78
Baudrillard, Jean, 55 beatitudes, in Gospels, 25 beauty, rich people as models of, 164
“be happy.” See duty to be happy
Beineix, Jean-Jacques, L'Alphabet du silence, 214n9
Bell, Daniel, 140
Bénichou, Paul, 29
Bentham, Jeremy, 28
Berlin, Isaiah, 66
Bible: Gospel of Luke, 25n21; Gospel of Matthew, 12, 14, 25n21
Biro, Pierre-Albert, 120
Bloch, Ernst, 27n1 body, human: and “fun,” 91–92; reconciliation with, 29–30. See also health; illness; pain; suffering bodybuilding, 55 bonfires of the vanities, 9–10 boredom, 37–38; and horror in wartime, 139; metaphors of, 77; and monastic life, 84–86; virtues of, 125–126; of working people, 165
Bossuet, Jacques-Bénigne, 11–12, 14, 24
Bourdieu, Pierre, 140
bourgeois gentleman (Molière), 151 bourgeoisie, 131–136, 185; and guilty conscience, 140–142; triumph of, 142–146; and vulgarity, 153–156
Brassaï (Gyula Halasz), 108
Breton, André, 27n1, 115–116
Buddhism: and solution by dissolution, 194; and suffering, 23, 219; in the West, 59–61, 224–226
Bunyan, John, Pilgrim's Progress, 70
Burroughs, William, 175
Butler, Samuel, Erewhon, 183–184 calendar, as constraint, 120–121
Campanella, Tommaso, 29
Camus, Albert, 27n1, 46
cancer, 212–213, 217n11
Canetti, Elias, 208
Canguilhem, Georges, 99n6 capitalism, and consumerism, 40. See also bourgeoisie carpe diem, 110
Carrière, Jean-Claude, 56n11
Carroll, Lewis (C. L. Dodgson), 109
Cassirer, Ernst, 202
Catholic Church: and attraction to suffering, 21–22; and Christian death, 24; and eschatological texts, 34; and indulgences, 16n8; and invention of purgatory, 15–16; and norm of suffering, 22–23
Cazeneuve, Jean, 59n16 celebrities, cult of, 178–179 celebrity magazines, 178 cell phone, 80
Cerroli, 79
Challier, Catherine, 222 charity, and resentment, 205
Chekhov, Anton, 135–136
Chesterton, G. K., 38
Chopra, Deepak, 60, 60n17
Christian art, and suffering, 22
Christian calculus, 14
Christianity: and hope of salvation, 33; and renunciation of

- the world, 225; and suffering, 20–26, 35, 186; views on happiness, 9–18. See also Catholic Church; Orthodox Church; Protestantism; Reformation
- Christmas every day, 115–116
- Cicero, Marcus Tullius, 64, 205; Tusculan Disputations, 186n2, 209
- Cioran, Emil, 212
- citizen, as suffering subject in revolt against his suffering, 203–204
- class differences, in bourgeoisie, 142–143
- Club of Rome, 145n14
- coalitions of sufferers, 197–200
- Cobain, Kurt, 81
- Coella, Rosolino, 79
- coenjoyment, of happiness of others, 205
- coercion, charitable, 48–51
- collective action, against suffering, 203–204
- comfort, 30, 165
- common people: happiness of, 122–124; and vulgarity, 149–151
- communism, fall of, 33
- compassion, distinct from love, 204–205
- competition, social, 173–174
- Conche, Marcel, 23n18
- Condorcet, Nicolas de (Marie-Jean-Antoine-Nicolas de Caritat, marquis de Condorcet), 31, 230
- conformism, 4; among the rich, 166–167
- Congrès de Banalyse, 90
- connection, human, through shared ordeal, 197–200
- conservatives, political, 141
- consolation by comparison, 111–112
- conspicuous consumption, 173
- conspiracy of silence, concerning misfortune, 185–186
- Constant, Benjamin, 46
- consumerism, 40–41, 47–48, 173
- contentment, 114–115
- contrast, need for, 118
- culminations, mystique of, 115–120
- Curie, Marie, 42
- customary society, 75
- Cutler, Howard, 56n12, 56n14
- Cyrulnik, Boris, 209n4
- Dalai Lama, 51n9, 56n11–56n12, 56n14, 59–61
- Dante Alighieri, 73
- death: absurdity of, 188; Christian, 23–24; defied by pleasure, 45; everpresent nature of, 13; fear of, 185; preparation for, 211–212; prohibition of, 184; public, in early modern period, 23–24; and sex, 199; and survival, 222; three types of, 13–14; and youth, 199
- Debord, Guy, 117
- Declaration of Independence, 30
- de Maistre, Joseph, 132
- democracy: and banality, 72–74; and vulgarity, 157
- depression: and acedia, 86; as response to happiness imperative, 48–51
- de Quincey, Thomas, 58
- Descartes, René, 13–14

- Deschiens, Les* (French TV show), 158 desire, insatiable, 175 destiny, bourgeoisie and, 134–136 detective novel, 103–104
Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM), 95, 95n5 diarists, 87–90
Diderot, Denis, 3
Dionysius Areopagiticus, 34 disability rights, 201–202 discretion, 112–113 diseases, 101; persistence of, 204 divine unreason, 124–126 doctors, and patients, 195–197
Dostoyevsky, Fyodor, 217
Drieu La Rochelle, Pierre, 98, 138 drugs, 57–58; pain-relieving, 25
Duchamp, Marcel, 119
Dumézil, Georges, 10
Dupont de Nemours, Pierre Samuel, 29 duty to be happy, 1–3, 5, 40–51; origin of phrase, 42n2 dying, caring for, 220–224 dysfunctional persons, 58

economy, as religion, 143–146
Eden: and idea of progress, 31–35; as locus of happiness, 10–11 education: as form of persecution, 191; through pain, 206–212 Ehrenberg, Alain, 59n16 elitism, and vulgarity, 160
Éluard, Paul, 27n1
emulation, 114–115
Encyclopédie, 124 endurance, morality of, 208–211

Enlightenment, 38, 72; and the bourgeoisie, 131–136; on compatibility of virtue and pleasure, 45; and idea of progress, 35; and promise of happiness, 27–31; and pursuit of happiness, 1–3, 5; and rehabilitation of pleasure, 26; and suffering, 33 environmental influences, 229 envy, 4, 111–115, 165–167
Epictetus, 21, 186n2, 194
Epicureans, and suffering, 21
Epicurus, 184, 186n2 eternal present, everyday life as, 76–83 ethic of seeming to feel good about oneself, 50–51 Europeans, and savoir-vivre, 75 euthanasia, 221
everyday life: Amiel and, 87–90; as frenetic inertia, 76–83; transfiguration of, 115–120. See also banality evil, persistence of, 35–38. See also suffering exceptional, invisible, 120 exclusivity of the rich, 166–167 existentialism, 46
exoticism, 167, 225 exteriority principle, 109, 147–148

failure, lifelong, 61–62 fantastic literature, 103–104 fast food, 75
fatalism, 97–98
fatigue: abstract, 79–80; in monastic life, 85–86 fear: and missed opportunity, 108; pleasure of, in safety, 103–104; in wartime, 139

- festive ideology, 127–128 festivity, two states of, 127–128 fiction, literary, 103–104
Fitzgerald, F. Scott, 168–169
Flaubert, Gustave, 77, 109, 135, 159–160 form, in life and art, 81–82
Fourier, Charles, 48
France: contemporary, 175; Old Regime, 132–133, 150; Second Empire, 151, 160; Third Republic, 184; twentieth-century, 177 freedom not to be happy, 66
French Revolution, 28, 31, 36 frenetic inertia, 76–83
Freud, Sigmund, 195; Civilization and Its Discontents, 39–40; on Dostoyevsky, 15n5 Freudianism, and introspection, 100 frugality, morality of, 174–177 fun, utopia of, 91–92
Furet, François, 141 future, as locus of hope, 30

Garden Gnome Liberation Front, 159 gardening, 122–124
gastronomy, 75
Gautier, Théophile, 136
genocide, use of term, 193
Getty, J. Paul, 174
Gide, André: Nourritures terrestres, 43; Nouvelles nourritures, 43
God, goodness of, and existence of evil, 23
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, 78
Gogol, Nikolai, 134 goodness of God, and existence of evil, 23 “good suffering,” 206–212. See also suffering greeting, as minimal social bond, 18–19
Groddeck, Georg, 45
Gross National Happiness (GNH), 145
Guibert, Hervé, 213–214, 216–217
Guilloux, Louis, 81

habits, transfiguration of, 74–75 happiness: as abstraction, 4, 172–174; arbitrariness of, 124–126; as art of the indirect, 51; blindness of, 187; bourgeois, 138–139; as Christian theme, 25–26; conflated with comfort, 143–146; as curse, 62–66; dependent on that of others, 228–230; economy of, 37–38; and the everyday, 78; found in writing, 82, 216; health as, 52–55; impossibility of, 39–40; inevitability of, 31; as injunction, 1–3, 5, 40–51; inner conviction of, 113; “in spite of,” 229–230; literature of, 147; located in past or future, 10–11; of mass public, 122–124; mistaken notions of, 5–6; nonlife as, 87–90; as norm, 65–66; of others, 111–115; and others’ distress, 227–228; paradoxes of, 3–5; as permanent state, 115–120, 153; postponement of, 184–187; promise of, 27–31; and quest for salvation, 12–14; as reward of existence, 190; and role of grace, 62–63; of some, as kitsch of others, 160; subordinated to freedom, 230; theories of, 3;

- happiness (continued)
voluntary nature of, 41–47; as word, 44–45 “happiness gene,” 152–153 health: as happiness, 52–55; as lack of concern about self, 54; obsessive pursuit of, 52–61 heaven, as locus of happiness, 10–11. See also paradise hedonism: as absolute value, 188; linked to failure and disgrace, 64–66
Hegel, G.W.F., 26, 32, 71
Heine, Heinrich, 27n1 hell, as Renaissance invention, 15
Hennezel, Marie de, 220, 221n13
Henriette Anne d’Angleterre, Duchess of Orléans, 24 heretics, and hope, 25–26
hero and heroism, 21, 90, 209, 216
Hitler, Adolf, 137
homosexuality, 142n12
hope, biblical inspiration for, 25–26 hospice care, 220–224
“how’s it going?” as formula of greeting, 18–19
Huizinga, Johan, 29, 70 human suffering. See suffering humility, as response to pain, 216
Huxley, Aldous, Brave New World, 57 “hyperclass,” transnational, 146 hypochondriacs, 58, 101, 196 identity politics, 141–142 illness, 98–103. See also pain; suffering imitation, and vulgarity, 153–156 immigrants, and physical labor, 191 incarnation, doctrine of, 17 individual, autonomous, 40, 43–47 indulgences, 16n8
inertia, frenetic, 76–83 inheritance, 176, 176n5 innovation, and vulgarity, 156 insouciance, 229–231; loss of, 52–61 Internet, 51, 76, 175
introspection, Freudianism and, 100
James, Henry, “The Beast in the Jungle,” 106–107
Jankélévitch, V., 65, 86, 222
Jaspers, Karl, 138
Jehel, Dr. Louis, 202n11
John Cassian, St., Institutes of the Coenobia, 85n1
John Paul II, pope, 20, 96; on euthanasia, 24; on suffering, 22–23
joie de vivre, 122–124, 122n8
Jünger, Ernst, 138
Kant, Immanuel, 30–31, 42n2, 120, 150
Kierkegaard, Søren, 222
kitsch, aesthetics of, 158–159
Kolakowski, Leszek, 171
Koons, Jeff, 158
Kübler-Ross, Elizabeth, 222n14 language, corruption of, 193
Lassalle, Ferdinand, 123
Lecomte, Benoit, 210
legal profession, and proliferation of suffering, 191
Leibniz, Gottfried, 205

- Leriche, René, 54
Leroux, Pierre, 27n1
Levine, Mark, 176n5 liberal democracies, and denial of suffering, 185–188 liberation of mores, 139–140 life: inspiring, 148; of perpetual failure, 61–62; successful, 161–162; well failed, 161–162
Lilla, Mark, 140n11
Locke, John, 28 locked-in syndrome, 214 loneliness, fear of, 185 longevity, pursuit of, 52–55, 58–59 lost illusions, 147–148 love: distinct from compassion, 204–205; distinct from happiness, 194 luck, 112. See also bad luck
Lucretius (Titus Lucretius Carus), 112
Luther, Martin, 12, 16–17
Luxemburg, Rosa, 123 luxury, 177

magazines, 90; and happiness imperative, 63–64 “magnificent sufferers,” 212–219
Malebranche, Nicolas, 17, 42n2
Mallarmé, Stéphane, 77
Mann, Thomas, 217 manners: formalism of, 157–158; rich people as models of, 164
Marcuse, Herbert, 45 marginal, attraction of, 167
Marx, Karl, 26, 32
massacres, of late twentieth century, 171–172
May 1968, events of, 43–45 meaning, and happiness, 124–126 media, and celebrity, 178–179 medicalization of life, 52–55 medical omnipotence, myth of, 199 medical specialization, 196–197

melatonin, 57, 57n15
Men’s Health magazine, 64n19
menuaille, 134
meteorology, 92–98
Middle Ages, 151 middle classes, 149–150, 150n1; American, 176n4
millenarians, and hope, 25–26
Miller, Henry, 44
millionaires, 165, 165n2 minorities, as trendsetters, 167
Mirabeau (Honoré Gabriel Riqueti, comte de Mirabeau), plan for happiness, 1–3 misfortune: and conspiracy of silence, 185–186; expansion of concept, 191–192; negation of, 183–184; renewed recognition of, 193–195 misfortunes, enumeration of, 184–185 Misrahi, Robert, 125 missed opportunities, 106–111
Mitterrand, François, 189 modern art, and transfiguration of the commonplace, 119–120 modernity: and banality, 70–71; and nostalgia/remorse, 38; and self-hatred, 146; and vulgarity, 156–160 Molière (Jean-Baptiste Poquelin), 151 monastic life, and boredom, 84–86 money: as abstraction, 172–174; hierarchy of, 170–171; as “necessary immorality,” 170; our

- money (continued) relationship to, 174–175; veneration of, 143–146; and vulgarity, 154–156
- Montaigne, Michel Eyquem de, 195
- Montesquieu (Charles-Louis de Secondat, baron de Montesquieu), 133
- moods, linked to weather, 92–98
- morality, of endurance, 208–211
- Morand, Paul, 71
- Moravia, Alberto, 77
- More, Sir Thomas, 29
- mourning, and repression of tears/grief, 187
- mystery, notion of, 23, 23n18
- mystics, Christian, and aesthetics of torture and blood, 22
- Nasio, J. D., 207
- natural catastrophes, and human negligence, 97–98
- natural law, and moral imperative, 45
- Nazi death camps, 218. See also Auschwitz
- Nazism, 124, 132, 138
- negligence, human, and natural catastrophes, 97–98
- negotiation, and concept of purgatory, 15–16
- neo-Buddhism, 224–226
- neoliberalism, 140
- neuropharmacology, 152–153
- newborn: baptism of, 20; suffering of, 32–33
- Nietzsche, Friedrich, 26, 80, 122n8, 173, 194
- nightclubs, 127
- Nizan, Paul, 136
- North Africa, French returned from, 155n4
- nostalgia, of modernity, 38
- nouveau riche, 154–156
- old age, 99–100
- original sin, 20, 36; everyday life as, 117
- Orthodox Church, and attraction to suffering, 21–22
- Other, our suffering for and because of, 194
- others, as prompters, 114–115
- Ouaki, 56n13
- overwork, 165
- pain: changing attitude toward, 204; distinct from penitence, 208–211; as fact, not religion, 219; “lessons” of, 206–212; persistence of, 35–38. See also suffering
- pain relief, and notion of suffering, 25
- palliative care, 220–224
- paradise: and idea of progress, 31–35; representations of, 33–34
- paradoxes, of being happy, 3–5
- Park, Andrew, 115–116
- Pascal, Blaise, 35; on death, 13, 24; on Epictetus, 21; on happiness before the Fall, 10; on hope of redemption, 12, 14; Pensées, 94
- Passion, of Christ, 20
- patient: confronting his illness, 200, 212–219; as educator of others, 200
- patients, and doctors, 195–197
- patronage, 170

- Pavese, Cesare, 220
Péguy, Charles, 132
Pelagian heresy, 35
penalism, 97–98
penitence, Christian, 15
perfectibility, belief in, 28
Philo of Alexandria, 211n6 physical effort, as misfortune, 191
Pinçon, Michel, 166n3
Pinçon-Charlot, Monique, 166n3
Pinoncelli, Pierre, 119n7 pioneers, patients as, 212–219
Plato: Republic, 150; on ugliness, 207 pleasure: compatibility with virtue, 45; and defiance of death, 45; insufficiency of, 48–51; perpetual, 115–120; preferred to happiness, 231; rehabilitation of, 29. See also fun pleasures, small, 122–124
Poe, Edgar Allen, 77, 103
Pohier, Jacques, 221n12
Pollan, Stephen, 176n5
pop art, 159
Portier, Louis, 196 possibilities, 109–111 poverty, 176; in developed countries, 171; involuntary, 170, 177; in United States, 176n4; voluntary, 177
praemeditatio, 211 prayers, answered, 147–148 productivist logic, and pleasure, 117 progress, idea of, 30–31; as defense of present suffering in name of future improvement, 31–33; and notion of paradise, 31–35; and realization of happiness, 34–35 proletariat, decline of, 142 prompters, others as, 114–115 prosperity, 143–146
prostitution, 117–118
Protestantism, 143; and attraction to suffering, 21–22
Proust, Marcel, 108, 163; À la Recherche du temps perdu, 227–228 provinces, concept of, 77–78 pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, 34 punctuality, 120–121
purgatory, 15–16, 16n8
Racine, Jean, 114
radicality, 122–124
real life, intermittency of, 118 reappropriation, patient and, 200 recovery from illness, 101–103 redemption, Christian, and idea of progress, 33–35
Reformation, 16–17
Regelson, William, 57n15
Reich, Wilhelm, 45, 145
reincarnation, 162
relativism, 195
religion: promise of immortality, 126; as source of meaning, 69–70; and vague promises, 33–35 remorse, of modernity, 38 Renaissance, and invention of hell, 15 renunciation: Buddhist doctrine of, 224–226; Christian doctrine of, 9–10 repetition, pleasure of, 74 resentment, and charity, 205 resilience, 209n4

- responsibility, 28–29
resurrection of Christ, 20
revisionism, 124
revolt, as response to pain, 203–204, 216 revolutionary movement, and proliferation of suffering, 185 rich, the, 174; Fitzgerald's portrayal of, 168–169; as model of happiness, 163–167 right to die, 59 right to live differently, 140
Rilke, Rainer Maria, 162
Rimbaud, Arthur, 91
Ringley, Jennifer, 76
rollerblading, 91
Romanticism, 138
Romantics, and bourgeoisie, 133–134
Rosset, Clément, 34
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques: on compassion, 204–205; New Héloïse, 37 routines, transfiguration of, 74–76. See also schedules Ruysbroek, St. John of, 147

sacraments, Christian, 15
Sade, Marquis de, 45
Saint-Simon (Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de Saint-Simon), 28 salvation: as Christian goal, 10–12; and idea of progress, 33–35; and suffering, 20–21; through works or through faith, 12, 16–17
Sartre, Jean-Paul, 77, 136 satisfaction, with present happiness, 114–115

savoir-vivre, rich people as models of, 164 schedules, as constraint, 120–121
Scheler, Max, 20
Schopenhauer, Arthur, 155–156 science, as last adventure, 219 seasonal affective disorder (SAD), 95
Segalen, Victor, 69n1, 148 self-denigration, 143; as bourgeois mode of being, 140–142 self-esteem movement, 50–51 self-fulfillment, as human goal, 43–47 self-hatred, modernity and, 146 self-interest, and bourgeoisie, 133
Seneca, Lucius Annaeus, 170–171 service providers, doctors as, 196 service society, 75
sex, and death, 199
sexuality, and proof of pleasure, 52
Sfez, Lucien, 142n12 sickness. See illness
Simonnot, Philippe, 170 sin, arising from prohibitions, 45 situationists, 117, 124–125
skeptic, patient as, 196
Smith, Adam, 28
snowboarding, 91
socialism, and proliferation of suffering, 185 social mobility, 149
Socrates, 186n2
Sollers, Philippe, 157
Solon, 161
Sombart, Werner, 137
Sontag, Susan, 188
Spengler, Oswald, 170
Spinoza, Benedict, 65, 105, 177, 216

- spirituality, and pursuit of health, 55–56
- spontaneity, 127–128; formalism of, 157–158
- sports, 191, 209
- Stalin, Joseph, 138
- Stancer, Rosie, 210
- state of grace, 58
- Steiner, George, 81, 208
- stock exchange, 175
- Stoicism, 194, 218; and praemeditatio, 211; and suffering, 21
- stress, and everyday life, 79–82
- sufferers: coalitions of, 197–200; exemplary, 212–219
- suffering: absurdity of, 188; avoidance of, 4–5; as basis of rights, 189–191; in Buddhism, 224–225; in Christianity, 20–26; concealment of, 186–187; as crime, 183–184; denial of reality of, 183–184; distinct from salutary adversity, 207; “good,” 206–212; growing aversion to, 33; and human limitations, 223–224; and idea of progress, 31–33; as identity, 101–103; market in, 192–193; meaninglessness of, 36–37; modern impatience with, 220; as mystery, 23; of newborn, 32–33; new culture of, 192–195; as norm, 22–23; outstanding examples of, 212–219; pathology of, 65–66; persistence of, 35–38; power of word, 189; proliferation of, 184–192; and speechlessness, 186–187; and spiritual renewal, 20–21; temporary armistices with, 219–224; of terminal patients, 32–33
- superman, Nietzschean, 217
- superrich, 174
- supreme Good, 5
- surfing, 91, 96
- surprise, blessed, 147–148, 153
- surrealism, and “wonder of the everyday,” 118–119
- surrealists, 124–125
- survivorship, 105
- Svevo, Italo, 101–102
- syncretism, 226
- Talleyrand (Charles Maurice de Talleyrand-Périgord), 133
- tardiness, 120–121
- Taylor, Charles, 230
- teacher, Buddhist, 225
- television weather channels, 94
- temporality: and everyday life, 76–83; and modernity, 70–74; and monastic life, 84–86; in religious worldview, 69–70
- Teresa, Mother, 22
- terminal patients, 32–33, 220–224
- terrorist attack, response to, 197–200, 202n11
- thriller, as genre, 103–104
- Tibetan cause, 59–61
- Tolstoy, Leo, 186–187; Death of Ivan Ilyich, 187n3
- totalitarianism, 40–41
- trash, propagation of, 184–192
- trauma, collective response to, 197–200
- triviality, focus on, 87–90
- Trouille, Clovis, 158
- ultrarich, 174
- uncertainty, over suffering and nonsuffering, 191–192

- unemployment, 165
unhappiness, 128; as failure to be happy, 5; immorality of, 48–51; over not being happy, 65–66; of the rich, 164
United States: and morality of frugality, 175–177; poverty in, 176n4; and vulgarity, 155–156 utilitarianism, 28, 30–31, 42n2, 143–145 utopia: of fun, 91–92; of permanent happiness, 115–120

Valéry, Paul, 20
Vaneigem, Raoul, 117; Traité de savoir-vivre..., 43–45, 139n10
Veblen, Thorstein, 173
Vergely, 208
Verlaine, Paul, 77 victims, power of, 201–202 victim status, competition over, 192–193
Vigny, Alfred de, 161
Villiers de L'Isle-Adam (Jean-Marie-Mathias-Philippe-Auguste, comte de Villiers de l'Isle-Adam), 145 virtual cemeteries, 221
virtual technologies, 92
Voltaire (François-Marie Arouet), 188; Candide, 37, 206; Le Mondain, 27

vulgarity, 149–151; and imitation, 153–156; and modernity, 156–160

war, 136–142
Warhol, Andy, 159
Watzlawick, Paul, 62
weather, passion for, 92–98
Weber, Max, 143
Weil, Simone, 21
well-being: increased availability of, 165–166; politics of, 143–146
West, Buddhism in, 224–226
West, Paul, 214–216, 218
Western, genre of, 103–104
will, and autonomy, 210
Woolf, Virginia, Mrs. Dalloway, 74 World Health Organization, 55, 101 writing, as locus of happiness, 82, 216

Xenophon, 208

Young, Neil, 81
youth: cult of, 54; and death, 199

Zeno, 186n2
“zero casualty” policy, in military, 139
Zola, Émile, 112, 135, 151
Zorn, Fritz, 212–213, 216–217, 217n11