Contents

List of Illustrations

Introduction: The Life of the Haggadah

Chapter 1 How the Haggadah Came to Be: Early Sources in the Bible, Tosefta, Mishnah, Talmud, and Midrash

Chapter 2 On Becoming a Book: From the Earliest Haggadot to the Illuminated Haggadot of the Middle Ages

Chapter 3 The Printed Haggadah and Its Enduring Conventions: A Text of One's Own

Chapter 4 Twentieth-Century Variations: The Haggadah in American Jewish Movements, Israeli Kibbutzim, and American Third Seders

Chapter 5 Haggadot of Darkness

Chapter 6 The Haggadah of the Moment

Acknowledgments

Resources

Glossary

Notes

Index

© Copyright Princeton University Press. No part of this book may be distributed, posted, or reproduced in any form by digital or mechanical means without prior written permission of the publisher.

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
The Life of the Haggadah

INTRODUCTION

When I began to think hard about the life of the Haggadah in preparation for this biography, Rabbi Lawrence Hoffman, who has written extensively on this text, suggested I go to Chicago and meet Stephen Durchslag, the premier private collector of the printed Haggadah in America. I’m glad I did, because shortly after my arrival, I learned how the Haggadah lived in a distinctive way.

The father of anthropological fieldwork is Bronislaw Malinowski, who distinguished himself from the armchair anthropologists of the nineteenth century by leaving home and going into the field for an extended period to live among the people who would be the objects of his study; in those days, they were invariably called “the natives.” Malinowski’s description of his arrival in Melanesian New Guinea is well known. “Imagine yourself,” Malinowski wrote, “suddenly set down surrounded by all your gear, alone on a tropical beach close to a native village, while the launch or dinghy which has brought you sails away, out of sight.”1 The entrance story foreshadows the anthropologist’s transformation from stranger to insider. It also hints at essential understandings that will be revealed. While anthropologists today rarely claim they have become insiders, performing fieldwork remains their primary research method and is the profession’s initiation rite. They still tell entrance stories, so, nodding to Malinowski, I preface this biography with my own.

I arrived along the shore of Lake Michigan, neither by launch nor by dinghy, but by car. This was Chicago’s Gold Coast, and I stood in front of the grand building where Mr. Durchslag, who had invited me to call him Steve, lived, hoping I was presentable. It was an unusually sunny and hot fall day. When I entered his modern, art-filled apartment overlooking the city and the lake, he graciously offered me a drink. I said, “Water will be lovely.” I felt awe and excitement as Steve ushered me into his wood-shelved library where his Haggadot were housed. (In Hebrew, the plural of Haggadah is Haggadot; still, many people say “Haggadahs,” an Anglicized mash-up of the Yiddish plural, hagodes.) Rare ones were just there on the shelves, not even behind glass, but placed along with his other books, even paperbacks. He selected treasures to show me, rapidly placing one on top of the next on a glass display table in the center of the room. Here was the 1629 Venice Haggadah, the 1695 Amsterdam Haggadah, and now the 1712 Amsterdam with its fold-out map of the biblical world. I could hardly keep up. Steve didn’t insist I coddle each Haggadah on a special foam rest as I had in libraries’ rare books collections; this was liberating, but what if I stressed the binding? He didn’t ask me to put on those special white gloves the special collections librarians made me wear. I could have been perusing my very modest shelf of stacked up Haggadot in my living room, a “collection” rich in the supermarket and Maxwell House coffee Haggadot my mother had amassed over years, not as exemplars of ephemera, but for us to use. I was anxious for the safety of Steve’s books—didn’t they need a more watchful eye, some protection, say, from me?

Distracting myself from these worrisome thoughts, I asked Steve how he had found his Haggadot, thinking he might have some miraculous discovery stories. He answered by matter-of-factly pulling off a Sotheby’s catalog and then one from Kestenbaum’s from his shelves; he pointed to a new purchase that was still in an unopened padded mailer, and he said more new ones were on their way. The tower of Haggadot he was piling on the table for me grew higher. Haggadot from Poona (Pune), Paris, South Africa, Shanghai, Melbourne, Munich. He declared it was time to clear off this batch to make space for others.

Inebriated by gratitude to be present to witness this wondrous collection, I enthusiastically stretched out my right arm over the books on the table, ready to help sweep them up so I could see even more rare Haggadot.

I had failed to notice that on this hot day, Steve had also gotten himself a drink, a bottle of diet cola, and it had been on the table all along, and it was uncapped. Now, thanks to my outstretched arm, it was spilling all over the table of Haggadot. I prayed: “Oh dear God, if the soda damages just the Sotheby’s catalog—that would be enough. Or just the Sotheby’s and also, the Kestenbaum’s; even that would be enough.”

I started to turn toward Steve, anticipating his horror and displaying my shame, but during my liturgical interlude, he had dashed off and returned with what he called a shmatta, a little towel. He was already clearing, dabbing, mopping, and reassuring me: “You cannot treat them as artifacts, or they lose their value.”

That is when I understood that while an individual Haggadah may be collected and cherished for its historical or artistic merits, it lives as its most authentic self when it is used, especially on a family’s Passover seder table. That is when it “gets a life,” so to speak. In that place of vulnerability, subject to wine spills and the assault of matzah crumbs, it choreographs the transmission of particular memories and inculcates sensibilities. I would go on to learn that a Haggadah comes to life when it leads those who have gathered to use it to ask hard questions about slavery, exile, redemption, and freeing the oppressed. Its liveliness increases each time it is taken out again to be used at a seder and each time celebrants use it. It is especially lively, but in a different way, when it fades into the background and gives rise to the conversation of those seated at the seder table, who are alive at the present moment and make telling the Passover story meaningful for themselves.

Writer James Salter introduced his memoir, Burning the Days: Recollection, as “more or less the story of a life. Not the complete story which, as in almost any case, is beyond telling—the length would be too great, longer than Proust, not to speak of the repetition.” This biography of the Haggadah is also more or less the story of a life. The word Haggadah means “telling” and the complete story of its life—spanning more than six thousand versions over millennia—would be beyond telling and unspeakably repetitive. Just as Salter selected from the parts of his life that were important to him, a different biographer of the Haggadah—say, a scholar of rabbinic literature, a historian of the Jewish book, or an expert in Jewish illuminated manuscripts—would make choices and craft a telling based on his or her frame of reference within the highly specialized (and brutally competitive, I have observed) academic field of Haggadah study. As the author of this telling, I recollect the life of the Haggadah by selecting versions and aspects that have engaged me and stimulated my speculation. What you have before you is not encyclopedic. It is personal, partial, and eclectic, and it reflects my being an anthropologist who investigates Jewish ritual innovation in the contemporary era. This means that when I turn backward, I do so unabashedly from a twenty-first-century perspective.

I will be introducing many versions of the Haggadah, including ones often reproduced, those deemed important for their rarity and beauty or their introduction of new artistic conventions and book-making technologies. We will also encounter versions that reflect the range of Jewish geographic distribution; disclose variations in Jewish practice; register historically significant events; or address liturgical, pedagogical, and theological matters. Making selections has been a challenge, for just about any Haggadah is a worthy springboard for reflection. Even the free supermarket Haggadah (with coupons for matzah and horseradish in the centerfold pages—I kid you not!) reflects an important facet of its story.

What Is the Haggadah?

This telling of the life of the Haggadah chronicles its recalibrations over time. We will move from its early sources in the Bible and rabbinic literature; to the years it was a handwritten manuscript; to its life as an illuminated book in the middle ages; to its emergence as a mass-produced printed book and later, as an artist’s book; to its iterations in the twentieth century in America and Israel, including those that reflect the Holocaust; and finally to the current explosion of new versions, including those using emerging technologies of our day.

Let us begin with a broad-stroked overview.

The Haggadah’s life as a liturgical text came about to fulfill a biblical injunction to fathers to tell the story of the Exodus from Egypt to their children (literally, to their sons): “And you shall tell your son on that day, ‘It is because of what the Lord did for me when I went free from Egypt’” (Exodus 13:8). For those Jewish men who lacked children, their students could fill in; for the childless without students, wives would do. Persons all alone could still tell the story to themselves, asking the questions and answering them, too. Transmit that memory of holy history as if it happened to you, as if you were there yourself among the children of Israel. Its essence: we were slaves, God rescued us once from degradation and brought us to freedom as a nation, and we are as grateful now as we were then. The moral: cherish freedom, or, lacking it, seek it out. And trust: the next redemption, however bleak the current moment, may be just around the bend. Transmit that memory of oppression captivatingly enough so the story attaches itself to the moral imagination. The memory of belonging to a people who knew slavery and then liberation should enliven so much empathy that one cannot help but feel responsible for helping others to achieve their own liberation.
In the biblical story of the children of Israel wandering in the desert, they are exhorted to explain to their children why they sacrificed lambs in the spring. While the First and Second Temples in Jerusalem stood, during Passover pilgrimages, the sacrifices took place in their vicinity. Following the destruction of the Second Temple (70 CE), and some say, even before that, the sacrifice was made symbolically with food and drink and an interpretive liturgy, including narration, and it took place in homes.

From the beginning of the diaspora from the Land of Israel until this day, the obligation of transmission is still carried out in the form of a step-by-step dining practice called the seder. The word means order. It refers to the order in which one recites the Passover liturgy, drinks four cups of wine, and engages ritually with symbolic foods by breaking, dipping, indicating, or hiding and seeking them. The seder is part Greco-Roman symposium (to be discussed later), part study and prayer session, part holiday dinner at Grandma and Grandpa’s house, and with growing frequency, part teach-in for social justice or political protest. Because a spirit of rejoicing on Passover (one of the three Jewish pilgrimage festivals; the others are Sukkot in the fall and Shavuot in late spring) is called for, the seder table became the site for a festive repast. There, under the spell of narrative and ritual, all the other degradations, exiles, and cries of the past might be briefly repressed; all enemies, past and future, are imagined as getting their due. In a passage expressing the horror of being slaughtered by Crusader armies in 1096, there is a cry for vengeance, one that has been a source of discomfort for some who adamantly omit it on the grounds of xenophobia: “Pour out Your wrath on the nations that do not know You . . . ; annihilate them from under God’s heavens.”

What exactly can you find in a fairly traditional Hagga-dah? I offer this synopsis: The Haggadah begins with a list of the fourteen steps that characterize the proceedings. Next comes the first of four blessings over wine, and instructions for washing one’s hands, saying a blessing over a green vegetable, and breaking a matzah and setting half aside for hiding. It is followed by a minisummary that explains why Passover is observed and introduces the theme of slavery and freedom. Next, a child asks four questions, which are only vaguely answered; there is a story of four archetypal children, the questions they ask, and the answers they receive. Many passages of rabbinic literature that elliptically refer to the Exodus are eventually enlivened by instructions to name the ten plagues as well as by a cheerful song called “Dayenu” (it would be enough), which expresses gratitude for all of God’s graciousness to the children of Israel along their journey. Psalms follow, and then comes a burst of ritual action: handwashing, a blessing before eating matzah, another one for eating bitter herbs, and a ritual for eating a sandwich made of the bitter herbs and a condiment called charoset. Finally, it is time for a festive meal. This is followed by instructions to eat the retrieved matzah half, a grace after meals, a welcome to the prophet Elijah, then more psalms, a statement of completion, and a selection of popular liturgical songs that have accrued over the years.

The Haggadah has no single author and no single editor. From the time of “tell your child,” spanning oral to written cultures, the Haggadah has grown into a commonplace book chronicling generations of verbal, illustrative, and ritual strategies that were considered, in their times and in their places, suitable for the task of transmission. Recite this! Teach that! Imbibe and ingest the sweet fruit and nut paste called charoset, the bitter herbs, the springy greens, the flat-crunchy matzah! Remember worse times, pray for better ones! Told with bursts of eloquence, courtesy of the psalms recited before and after the meal, and climaxing in loveable cumulative ditties, the assemblage of direction, prayer, and teaching became codified along the way. It has made for a night of dinner theater, in which cast and audience are one and the same as they utter, “It is because of what the Lord did for me when I went forth from Egypt” (Exodus 13:8). From the very start, qualities such as deep empathy, flexibility, fluidity, and personalization were attached to this practice of oral transmission performed communally and intergenerationally. If the gambit worked, heritage and obligation would be transmitted. The newest generation would know what their parents had known: how to remember their way into tribal belonging. Come the next year, the initiation would be repeated with age-appropriate nods to children’s growing skills, attention spans, and possible alienation, and thus, membership and the experience of belonging would be intensified.

While the Haggadah shapes the way the Exodus narrative is told, how the sacramental foods are eaten, and how God is to be acknowledged, there is—now especially—significant range in how much authority a Haggadah asserts. On one extreme, there are those who follow their texts to the letter; they can even find, in the small print, instructions for how to measure the precise amounts of matzah that must be eaten. On the other extreme, there are many, worldwide, who skip over what seems just too much. They include the father of playwright Tony Kushner, whose skipping practices are humorously recalled in his 1995 play “Notes on Akiba” written for a third seder performance piece at the Jewish Museum in New York. (Here’s why his father skips the section about the ten plagues: it is “lengthy, too close to dinner to be endured, and exceedingly blood-curdling.”)

Recently, a blogger from Hawaii found her childhood Haggadot while cleaning out her mother’s basement in Kansas City and wrote:

My father’s copy is carefully marked in red pen so he could lead our seder . . . to dinner as efficiently as possible. He even wrote the word “Skip” in many places. Thank goodness. The Gershun family has always been short on seder and long on food! We definitely follow that tradition in this Gershun home to this day.

Some quit their seders midway, putting aside their Haggadot for good when the festive meal is served. While some use an abridged version (even a Passover coloring book, even after the children are now grown!) and are done in minutes, others, proud that their seders extend into the wee hours, make it to the very last pages. Their Haggadah might inspire interruptions: debates, classical teachings that come to mind, new readings, specially composed songs and dances, and planned and spontaneous dramatizations. I think of the Passover my mother, who had just received a walking stick and a cape for her April birthday, took up on the spur of the moment and called herself Grandma Moses. She led a mid-seder parade of little grandchildren rushing through the living room until they were chased by Pharaoh’s invisible army as they crossed the laundry room, which she designated as the “sea.” A few years back, in an unscripted portion of the seder, my colleague, a Jewish Studies professor, put his Haggadah down and invited his preschoolers to break, piñata-style, the gold-painted modern-day idol he had constructed for them out of cardboard: a larger-than-life computer. Such instances of home-style performance art may evoke 1960s happenings, but they are actually inspired by even earlier generations of Jews who have been lively Haggadah enactors.

The Haggadah is unlike most other Jewish texts in terms of the laws that govern its usage. Let me explain. Whereas Jewish law stipulates that the Torah scroll must be read from and the Scroll of Esther must be heard, no laws stipulate how the Haggadah should be read aloud or heard. While there is usually a leader who chants the Haggadah or directs those around the table to take parts, one could read it quietly to oneself and perform the required ritual acts. As with the Torah, there are traditions of cantillation for singing the Haggadah that have been passed down in Judaism’s different ethnic groups, but this is a home ceremony, so no guardians stand by to correct words that are inadvertently skipped or misread.

Conceivably, given that the Haggadah is constructed as a script or prompt, one could not use a Haggadah at all and conduct a Passover seder from memory. Until codified, Jewish liturgy, law, and learning were orally transmitted; the grand exception was the written Torah scroll. Orality preserved the dynamism of Jewish tradition, its freshness. If a memorized general script for the seder might have once been sufficient for a people with a strong oral tradition, it eventually ceased being so, except in moments of terrible trials, such as during the Holocaust, when for some, the only available Haggadah was the Haggadah of memory.

The Haggadah also has a distinctive life as a Jewish ritual object. Containing the name of God, protocols of respect must be observed. Drop it and it is kissed. When it is worn out, it should be stored in a repository called a geniza until it can be buried. Such considerations aside, the Haggadah is considered less sacred than a Torah scroll. (The rule of thumb: the more sacred an object is considered, the more rules there are governing its production and usage.) A Torah must be handwritten on sheets of parchment made from the skin of a kosher animal (usually from a cow) that has been soaked in limewater, stretched, and scraped. The ink is made of plant gall, copper sulfate crystals, gum arabic, and water and is applied with a quill from a kosher goose or a turkey. It is written out precisely and accurately using traditional letterings, spacing, and columns. No illustrations. The sheets of parchment are sewn together with strings of animal sinew and wound on wooden rollers. If there is an error in the Torah scroll or any defacement, it is not kosher, fit for use, the same word used to describe foods permitted to a Jew. This work can only be done by a ritual scribe, called a sofer, who prepares for the day’s work with prayer and ablution.

While there are some more or less established conventions for a Haggadah’s layout, there is no protocol for how it must be written. What inks, paints, or paper can be used? How should it be bound? It’s up for grabs.

There is no protocol for storage and handling. The Torah scroll, crowned with a silver headpiece or silk scarves and wrapped in embroidered velvet or enclosed upright in a decorated metal or wooden box, is taken from an often ornate ark that is the focal point of the synagogue’s architecture. Before and after it is read from, it is processed before congregants who have risen in its honor and reach out to transfer a kiss on it by hand, prayer book, or fringe of the prayer shawl. The choreography makes it clear: the Torah represents both God’s word and God’s palpable presence. There is no elaborate choreography for Haggadot, kept mostly at home. True, they may get places of honor on bookshelves next to other Jewish texts. An especially lovely Haggadah may be displayed and given pride of place in the living room alongside a Hanukkah candelabra, which, together with a mezuzah on the door, indicate a Jewish American home. (Interestingly enough, many Jews who have Haggadot at home won’t have a Bible or prayer book.) Likely enough, after Passover, most Haggadot are stacked in batches, rubber-banded, packed away in a box along with the Passover dishes and the chopping bowl, and stored in the basement, attic, or closet until they get taken out again next year. Come Passover eve, like spring crocuses, they appear again, perhaps a little worse for wear. But who notices? It’s a sometimes scruffy, familiar item.

Rare Haggadot have been stored in mundane places, though not necessarily on purpose. In 2013, an auctioneer app-raising the contents of a home in North Manchester, England, discovered an ornately illustrated eighteenth-century Haggadah made by a scribe to the imperial court in Vienna for the Oppenheim banking family. It was languishing in an Osem soup carton in the garage! It had apparently come from Belgium to Britain when its owners escaped the Nazis, but the current owners had no idea they even owned it, let alone how it had come into the family’s possession. Dr. Yaakov Wise of the Centre for Jewish Studies at the University of Manchester said of this miraculous discovery: “This was probably in use for 200 years. There are wine and food stains on it which is exactly what you would expect when it was at the table. It is easy to imagine the wealthy family in Vienna sitting around in their wigs and their buckled shoes reading it by candlelight.” It was later sold at auction for $340,000.

A Haggadah has a life as an object that is viewed, but not used, in museum and library collections, and they are found in private Judaica collections as well. Everyday people collect Haggadot too, sometimes purposefully—say, by purchasing a new one each year—and often by chance—it’s quite easy to walk out of a supermarket with a free (or “free with a purchase”) copy. OK, I confess: a few free copies.

There have been exquisite Haggadot, including illuminated versions of the medieval period, publications in the new age of printing, and periodic revivals of illumination, including the arresting mid-twentieth-century Haggadah of Arthur Syzk. In our age, there have been fine art versions, originals, limited editions, and mass-produced copies. Some of my personal favorite Haggadah artists are Zoya Cher-kassy, Maty Grünberg, Tamar Messer, Avner Moriah, Mark Podwal, Ben Shahn, Eliyahu Sidi, and Barbara Wolff.

An exceptional Haggadah designated as a collector’s item generates veneration and might spend its days at the Jewish National Library in Jerusalem (which is said to have the world’s largest collection of Haggadot—over 10,000!), the British Library, the Bodleian, the Library of Congress, the New York Public Library, the library of the Jewish Theological Seminary, the Morgan Library, and even the...
Vatican—not to mention in university libraries, synagogues, Jewish museums, or private homes. Still, there is pride of place for a workaday variant, such as one that has been passed down by family members and distinguished by the patina of love and memory; its link to generations past stimulates a loving respect and attaches an extra freight of meaning.

How many versions of the Haggadah are there? Determining that has fueled a cottage industry of Haggadah bibliographies. In 1901 there was Shmuel Wiener’s A Bibliography of the Passover Haggadah listing 909 publications; Abraham Yaari’s A Bibliography of the Passover Haggadah (1960) lists 2,700, and later increased the number by 174. In his magisterial 1975 book Haggadah in History, which chronicles five centuries of the Haggadah in print, from its appearance in liturgical compendia to its existence as a freestanding volume, Yosef Hayim Yerushalmi characterized the Haggadah as “the most popular and beloved of Hebrew books.” He tipped his hat to bibliographers who cataloged over 3,500 editions coming to light, the most reprinted, widely translated, frequently illustrated, and widely issued volume wherever Jewish presses have flourished. Yitzhak Yudlov then compiled a 1997 Haggadah Thesaurus accounting for 4,715 Haggadot since the beginning of printing until 1960. Now, whenever figures are cited, the number is usually 5,000 and counting. Nearly every article about the Haggadah notes its many revisions, with Edward Rothstein in the April 17, 2011, New York Times offering one of the most eloquent accounts:

Though only read once or twice a year, it has probably had more wine spilled on it than any other book ever published. Over the centuries, it has been paraphrased, abridged, translated, transliterated and transformed. It has been sung, chanted, illustrated and supplanted. And in 5,000 or so editions since the invention of the printing press.7

Why so many? Why has the Haggadah resisted being fixed once and for all? To answer this question, I traveled around America and to Israel consulting with Haggadah experts—Jewish museum curators, Judaica librarians, collectors, scholars, rabbis, and those who have created and published Haggadot of their own. I inevitably heard three answers.

The first is geography, because Jews have lived all over the world. Since the Haggadah may be recited in any language so it can be understood, it has been printed in Hebrew and translated into English, Yiddish, Judeo-Italian, Judeo-Spanish, French, Spanish, Russian, Polish, Chinese, Italian, Croatian, Danish, Czech, Finnish, Turkish, Swedish, Hungarian, Amharic . . . just to name a few. An 1874 Haggadah written in Hebrew and Marathi depicting the Bene Israel Jews of India is often used to make this point of the diversity of Jewish settlement. In this same vein, we hear about community Haggadot from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, written in Hebrew, Aramaic, Chinese, and Judeo-Persian that were used by Jews who had settled in the Chinese city of Kaifeng.

The second answer is diversity of Jewish practice. The Haggadah has accommodated the many ways Judaism has been practiced and reflects different liturgical rites. We see that easily in contemporary America, with Haggadot created for Reform, Conservative, Reconstructionist, Orthodox, Sephardic, Ultra-Orthodox, Hasidic, Renewal, Humanist, and secular Jews as well as for those describing themselves as nondenominational or postdenominational.
History is the third answer. The Haggadah has expanded to chronicle events—especially crises and cataclysms—that have become assimilated into the story Jews tell about themselves at the annual ritual of peoplehood. Consider the Haggadah written during the Holocaust that comes with nightmarish illustrations reflecting concentration or DP camps. Consider, too, the many Israeli or American Haggadot issued soon after the Six-Day War of 1967 with celebratory images of Israeli soldiers praying at the Western Wall or whimsical drawings of Jerusalem’s Old City. As it happens, there are Haggadot, such as the Schechter Haggadah, which, in addition to providing the traditional materials for the seder also tell the history of Jews through pictures and commentary. Jacob Ari Labendz has called them historiographical Haggadot because they reveal how Jews in different places and eras saw themselves observing Passover and also engage the reader in self-reflexive embedding. Think of the Morton Salt girl who carries a container of salt with smaller picture of herself—into an imagined infinitum. “It is as if they ask their reader to look upon himself as though he were a Jew of another era looking upon himself ‘as though he went out of Egypt.’”

In the course of this biography, we will see precisely how geography, practice, and history have occasioned revision . . . and, in all likelihood, will continue to do so. As we come to know the life of the Haggadah more intimately and learn how it has functioned as an organism, we shall see how its capacity to maintain a core and still be an ever-flexible work in process, produced with the ever-changing needs of the current celebrants and their situations in mind, has been a key to its longevity.
A page number in italics refers to an illustration.

Aaron, 20, 50, 71; image in 1695
Amsterdam Haggadah, 80;
image in King James Bible, 79
Abarbanel, Isaac, 71, 82, 169–70
Abaye, 35–36
Abraham, 19, 22, 32, 39
Abzug, Bella, 151
Adler, Miklós, 128
afikomen, 34, 39, 43; in Birds’
Head Haggadah, 50; in Tosefta ceremony, 26
Akiva (Talmudic sage), 33
Alberstein, Chava, 164–65
Alexander, A., 87–88
Allen, Woody, 171
Altmann, Maria, 53
American Jewish Congress, memorial liturgy for Holo-
cast victims, 130–32, 133
Amram Gaon, 40, 41
Amsterdam Haggadah of 1695:
borrowed images in, 75–77, 79, 80; commentary in margins of, 82–83; copper engraved images in, 70, 71, 77, 114; in Durchslag collection, 2; explanations in, 86; with foldout map of Israel in biblical times, 71; four sons illustrated in, 77; influence on subsequent printed editions, 67, 69–70; Passover songs included in, 161; promotional material in, 70–71; translations included in, 84–85
Amsterdam Haggadah of 1712,
2, 67, 79
Angel, Marc C., 141
Angel of Death: lamb’s blood as sign for, 20; repurposed illustration of, as Esther, 76–77
Ani Ma’amin (I Believe), 131, 135
The Animated Haggadah, 143
Ansbacher, Leo, 125
Arbeter Ring (Workmen’s Circle), 105, 106–7
Ari (Isaac Luria Ashkenazi), 82
artichokes, welcoming interfaith families, 154
artists of recent versions, 14, 143–44; rendering Chad
Gadya (An Only Goat), 164

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
ArtScroll Haggadah, 111–12
ArtScroll Mesorah, 111
artwork of Haggadot: of Arthur Szyk, 119–22, 120; Chad Gadya (An Only Goat) rendered in, 164; in Conservative Haggadah of 1982, 110; copper engravings in, 70, 71, 76, 114; in kibbut-zim, 102; medieval introduction of visual elements, 46–
47; in Offenbach Haggadah
of 1920s, 113–15; in Offen-bach of 1722, 114; paper cutting and microcalligraphy, 143; of Podwal in 2012 Reform Haggadah, 138; of Sieg-
mund Forst in 1951 Abraham Regelson Haggadah, 111; in today’s market, 14, 143–44;
Union Haggadot of Reform movement and, 94, 96, 97;
woodcuts in, 68, 69, 114, 115,
128. See also illuminated
Haggadot
Asher Anshel ben Eliezer
Chazan, 71
Ashkenazi Jews: English translation for, 87; Haggadot with Yiddish instructions for, 84– 85; owning a Haggadah by fifteenth century, 46; region represented by, 44
Atar, Hayim, 102
Azulai, Haim Yosef David (Chida), 82
ba’al haseder, 33
Babylonian Haggadah tradition,
41, 42, 44
Barenblat, Rachel, 152–53
Baskin, Leonard, 97
Bat Sheva Ensemble, 163
Benedikt family, 53
Bene Israel Jews of India, 16, 85
Berger, David, 32
Berkowitz, Matt, 143
Beta Yisrael, 85–86
Bet Ha-Shitah Haggadah, 104
Bezalel Haggadah, 164
Bialik, Hayim Nachman, 97, 104
Bibatz, Samson, 53
Bible: King James Bible of 1611, 79, 79; sources of Passover rituals in, 19–23. See also II
Chronicles; Deuteronomy;
Exodus; Esther; Genesis;
Numbers; Song of Songs
bibliographies of Haggadot, 15
Birds’ Head Haggadah, 49–54, 51
Birnbaum Haggadah, 110
bitter herbs: artist’s gendered joke about, 62; in biblical book of Exodus, 20; early decorative motifs representing,
47; in Elie Wiesel’s Haggadah, 135–36; Maimonides on rules of, 44; in new practices after destruction of Second Temple, 24;
as reminders of Egyptians,
30; in rituals of Holocaust
Remembrance Day, 136; sandwich of charoset and, 8, 43, 51, 135–36; in Sheinson's Haggadah for Holocaust survivors, 129; social justice supplement using, 148; in steps of seder, 8, 9, 43. See also maror blessings: for foods in Dropsie Haggadah, 41; over matzah, 8, 43, 55; recast as statements in Arbeter Ring Haggadah, 107; recited from Haggadah for other festivals, 46; in steps of seder, 8, 43; studied by rabbis of the Talmud, 34 blind rabbis, 33

Bonaventura de la Nay, 113–14

borrowed images, 75–81; from Christian sources, 75–76, 78–79; in Haggadot for private use, 80–81

Boussidan, Ya'akov, 143

Branduardi, Angelo, 164

Broner, E. M., 151, 152

Bronstein, Herbert, 97

Brooks, Geraldine, 59–60

Buber, Martin, 97

Burning the Days (Salter), 4
cantillation, traditions of, 11

Cantor, Aviva, 151

Chad Gadya (An Only Goat), 161, 162, 164–65, 172

Chakovsky, Bria, 150

charoset: in Elie Wiesel's Haggadah, 136; in home ceremony of Tosefta, 26; in illuminated Haggadot, 51; as mitzvah, 35–37; orange-flavored in GLBT Haggadah, 156; sandwich of bitter herbs and, 8, 43, 51, 135–36; in Sarajevo Haggadah, 54; in steps of seder, 8, 9; Talmudic debate on, 35–37

Cherkassy, Zoya, 14, 192n6

Chesler, Phyllis, 151

Chida (Haim Yosef David Azulai), 82

chocolate on seder plate, 154

Christian sources of imagery: borrowed images, 75–76, 78–79; illuminating practices, 48, 54

II Chronicles, biblical book of, 23

circumcision, 22

CLAL (National Jewish Center for Learning and Leadership), 134

Clal Yisrael, 182n5

Cleaver, Eldridge, 147

climate change, global, 147

coffee beans on seder plate, 154

Cohen, Israel I., 123–24

Cohen, Tamara, 151

collections of Haggadot, 14–15; of the author, 2–3; of Stephen Durchslag, 1, 2–4 commentaries: in ArtScroll Haggadot, 111; in Conservative Haggadah of 1982, 110; contemporary collections of, commentaries (continued)

83–84; in printed Haggadot, 81–84
communitas, 25
concentration camps: Ani Ma’amín (I Believe) sung in, 131; Haggadah recited from memory in, 122–24; Haggadah smuggled into, 122; named in liturgies included with Haggadot, 135, 137; in Podwal’s image for Wiesel’s Haggadah, 138
Conservative movement, Haggadot of, 16, 107, 108–10, 132–33, 136
Coppel, Werner, 124–25
copper engraving, 70, 71, 76, 114
Cowan, Lillian, 109
Crimes and Misdemeanors (film), 171
dance, based on Echad Mi Yode’a, 163–64
“Dayenu”: in fairly traditional Haggadah, 8; referenced in The Sayer by Lau-Lavie, 160; in Sheinson’s Haggadah for Holocaust survivors, 129; in Washington Haggadah, 62; whacking with scallions during, 92
Deinard, Ephraim, 65
Deuteronomy: Passover ritual in, 20, 22; question posed in, 38–39; story of enslavement and exodus in, 19; wandering Aramean in, 31–32
digitization: of illuminated Haggadot, 49; of personalized versions, 154; of Washington Haggadah, 66
Dishon, David, 141
Dropsie Haggadah, 41–42
Durchslag, Stephen, 1, 2–4
Durkheim, Émile, 166
Echad Mi Yode’a (Who Knows One?), 143, 158–59, 161–62, 163, 179; dance based on, 163–64
Egalitarian Haggadah, 151
Egypt. See Exodus story
Einstein, Albert, 97
Eleazar son of Rabbi Zadok, 35, 36
Eliezer ben Elijah Ashkenazi, 64
Elijah Ben Solomon (Vilna Gaon), 82
Elijah’s arrival: in Birds’ Head Haggadah, 52; cup of wine and, 63–64, 87–88, 135; heralding the coming of the Messiah, 52, 63; Miriam’s Cup and, 155; modes of transportation for, 64; in Washington Haggadah, 63, 63–64; welcomed in traditional Haggadah, 8
Elzas, Barnett A., 94
English-language commentaries, in ArtScroll Haggadot, 111

kibbutz Haggadot emphasizing human agency in, 103–4; parent’s responsibility to transmit the memory, 38; recalled in maggid section of Haggadah, 43, 45; recent oppressive problems compared to, 154; recited from memory in concentration camp, 124; Reconstructionist retelling of, 108, 109; summarized in Deuteronomy, 19

Ezekiel, biblical book of, 168

Ezekiel, Moses, 96

Ezra Synagogue in Old Cairo, 40, 44

Fastag, Azriel-David, 131

Feast of Matzot, in Exodus, 21

Feast of Unleavened Bread, in Leviticus, 21

feminism: Haggadah commentaries with perspective of, 84; New Union Haggadah of 2014 and, 98; students’ Haggadah addressing issues of, 161. See also women feminist Haggadot, 149–53; Maxwell House sponsor’s distancing from, 75; Miriam’s Cup in, 155; Paley’s Seder Masochism, 140; radical versions replaced by celebration of Jewish women, 151–52; rendering sons as daughters or children, 38

INDEX
fifth cup of wine: Talmudic debate on, 34–35, 133; as thanksgiving for State of Israel, 133–34
Finkelstein, Louis, 108–9
Foer, Jonathan Safran, 81, 173
food insecurity, 148–49, 154, 158, 172–73 four cups of wine: Abarbanel's commentary on, 83; Alexander's advice on, 87–88; Amsterdam Haggadah's question about, 83; four blessings over, 7, 8, 43, 184n4; reduced to one in British Reform Haggadah, 94; in typical kibbutz Haggadah, 102–3. See also wine four daughters, 38, 151, 152
four questions: Abarbanel's commentary on, 82–83; four Bible verses related to, 38, 183n16; in kibbutz Haggadot, 103; in Mishnah, 29–30; Munich seder in 1946 with no children to ask, 129; in The Sayer by Lau-Lavie, 159–60; substitution in Union Haggadah, 95; in traditional Haggadah, 8; traditionally asked by boys, 111
four rabbis, in Birds' Head Haggadah, 50–51 four sons: Abarbanel's commentary on, 83; in Amsterdam Haggadah of 1695, 77; borrowed images of, in Hakohen's illustrations, 76; as children in retranslated Maxwell house Haggadah, 75; Dropsie Haggadah with no mention of, 41; in kibbutz parody, 100; midrashic influence on, 38–39, 50–51; Reisinger's modern artistic rendering of, 110; replaced by four daughters, 38, 151; in Second Cincinnati Haggadah, 78. See also four questions; wicked son; wise son Frank, Anne, 97, 135, 136, 137 freedom: helping others to achieve, 6; Holocaust reference in Reform Haggadah and, 137; hope for more complete liberation and, 173; as Reconstructionist theme, 107–8; referenced in The Sayer by Lau-Lavie, 160; Sharansky's memory of Haggadah in Siberia and, 126; symbolized in broken matzah, 88–89, 132; as theme in Haggadah, 6, 8
Freedom Seder, 146–48
Free Zone (film), 165
Friedman, Debbie, 151, 152
Friends of Refugees of Eastern Europe (FREE), 142
Frojmavic, Eva, 55
Gandhi, 147
gender: inclusive language in 2014 New Union Haggadah, 98; retranslated Maxwell house coffee Haggadah and,
74–75; Washington Haggadah and, 62–64; ways of addressing God and, 153
Genesis: illuminated Haggadot with stories from, 52, 54; story of the exodus foreshadowed in, 18–19
genizah, 12, 40
genim, 40–41
George VI, King of England, 121–22
Gibson, Margaret, 40
Ginsberg, Allen, 147
Gitai, Amos, 165
Glatzer, Nahum N., 141
GLBT Haggadah, seder plates for, 155–56, 157
Golan Heights Winery Haggadah, 143
Goldberg, Nathan, 109, 141
Greco-Roman symposium: after-dinner revelry of, 27, 39; Jesus’s Last Supper and, 28; seder’s resemblance to, 7; table ritual of Mishnah and Tosefta and, 27
Greenberg, Yitz, 134
green vegetable, blessing over, 8, 9, 43
Grünberg, Maty, 14, 143, 164
Gubkin, Liora, 133, 136
Guggenheim, Siegfried, 113–19
Gurs Haggadah, 125–26
Haggadah for the Liberated Lamb, 154–55
Haggadah Lepesach of British Reform movement, 93–94
Hakohen, Abraham, 75
Hallel: in Mishnah ceremony, 27, 28; recited over fifth cup of wine, 34
handwashing: Abarbanel’s commentary on, 83; in Greco-Roman symposium, 27; in illuminated Haggadot, 51, 55; in steps of seder, 43; in traditional Haggadah, 8 Hanukkah, 13, 72
hares, Haggadah illustrations of, 64–65
Hasidic Haggadot, 16;
Lubavitch, 141–42
Hasidic rabbi, in concentration camp, 122–23
Hatikva, 109
Hauptman, Judith, 26
Heschel, Susannah, 145–46
Hezekiah, King, 23
hiddur mitzvah, 48
historiographical Haggadot, 17 history, as source of diverse Haggadot, 17
Hochman, Abraham, 73
Hoffman, Jan, 144
Hoffman, Lawrence, 1, 26
Holbein, Hans, 75
Holocaust: Conservative Haggadah of 1982 with text on, 110; figuring out how to Holocaust (continued)
create postwar Haggadot and, 132–33; Haggadah
buried in cemetery during, 124; Haggadah written during, 17; Haggadot only in memory during, 12, 122–24; Haggadot written from memory during, 125–26; idea
of all-powerful God and,
170; Israel's day of remembrance for, 104, 189n20; kibbutz Haggadot with early responses to, 113; survivors' Haggadot, 127–30. See also concentration camps

Holocaust Remembrance Day, 136

Hunger Seder Haggadah, 148–49

illuminated Haggadot, 14; available facsimiles of fourteenth-century treasures, 48–
49; Birds’ Head Haggadah,
49–54; Christian sources of,
48, 78–79; commissioned by
Daniel and Joanna Rose, 144; commissioned by wealthy Jewish families, 47– 48; digitized, 49; handwritten in the present day, 66;
iconophobic tendencies possibly interrupting, 47; medieval, 46–49; revived in seventeenth and eighteenth

204 centuries, 77–79; Sarajevo Haggadah, 52, 54–60; standard categories of images in, 50–52; Szyk’s Haggadah with qualities of, 119, 120; Washington Haggadah, 60–66

Imamovic, Enver, 58

imperfections of Haggadah, 166–70

interfaith families: artichokes as welcoming symbol for, 154; Haggadah of Cokie and Steve Roberts, 117; students creating Haggadot relevant to, 161

Iraqi Jews’ Haggadot, recovered
in Saddam's basement,
126–27

Israel, State of: Conservative Haggadah of 1982 with text on, 110; figuring out recognition of, in postwar Hagga-dot, 132; Guggenheim’s 1960
Haggadah with prayer for,
118; Jewish labor movement raising funds for, 106; linked with Holocaust in postwar Haggadot, 132–33; national anthem included in American Conservative Haggadah, 109; national holidays in,
104, 189n20; Orthodox Jews proposing Haggadah refer-tences to, 133–34; popular Haggadot in, 142–43; recent updates to traditional

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
Haggadot in, 156–59; Sheinson's conviction of need to settle in, 129–30; Szyk's artistic portrayal of pioneers in, 121
Israel ben Moses, 113
Israel Museum in Jerusalem,
49, 53
Issacher Ber ben Abraham Eliezer, 71
Jastrow, Morris, 96
Jesus's Last Supper, 28–29
Jewish Labor Bund, 106
Jewish Labor Committee for Palestine, 106
Jewish labor movement in America, 105–7
Jewish National Library in Jerusalem, 14
Jewish Renewal movement, 147
Jewish soldiers: celebrating Passover in 1862, 37; in Palestine, 127; in World War II, 127
Jewish Theological Seminary,
108, 128
Joel ben Rabbi Simon, 116
Joel Feibush ben Simeon, 61–
62, 64
Johanan (Talmudic sage), 35–36
Joseph Jacobs Advertising Agency, 73, 75
Joseph the Demon, 34
Josiah, King, 23
Judah Loew ben Bezalel, 82
Judeo-Italian, 16, 84
Judeo-Spanish (Ladino), 16, 84
Kadima, 150
Kahn, Hermann, 53
Kalderon, Asher, 143
Kalchofsky, Roberta, 154
Kaplan, Mordecai, 108–9
Karaite, 42
Kasher, Menachem, 39, 83,
133–34
Katznelson, 104
Kibbutz Afikim, 100
Kibbutz Ein Harod, 102
kibbutz Haggadot, 90–91, 93, 98–104; early responses to Holocaust in, 113; as precedent for innovative seders, 146
Kibbutz Naan, 103
Kibbutz Ramat Yochnan, 100
Kibbutz Tel Yeshayahu, 103
Kibbutz Yagur, 102
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 147
King James Bible of 1611, 79, 79
Klausner, Abraham J., 128
Klawans, Jonathan, 28–29
Klimt, Gustav, 53–54
Klingspor Brothers Press, 114
Klučo, Merima, 60
Koch, Rudolf, 114–15
Kogman-Appel, Katrin, 66
Kohen family, 57
Koppel, Ted, 58
Korech, 43, 135–36. See also sandwich of bitter herbs and charoset
“Koren Ethiopian Haggada,” 85–86, 187
Korkut, Derviš, 57–58
Kredel, Fritz, 115, 118
Kristallnacht, 117
Kulp, Joshua, 183
Kushner, Tony, 10

Labendz, Jacob Ari, 17
labor movement, of Jews in America, 105–7
Labor Zionist Alliance, 105–6
Ladino (Judeo-Spanish), 16, 84
lamb, eaten at seder: Abarbanel’s commentary on, 83; replaced in vegetarian Haggadah, 154–55; in Washington Haggadah, 62. See also sacrifice of lambs Lang, Berel, 130
languages of Haggadot, 16. See also English-language Haggadot; Yiddish large print Haggadot, 73
Last Supper of Jesus, 28–29
Lau-Lavie, Amichai, 159–60
leader who chants the Haggadah, 11, 33
leaning (reclining), 27, 28, 30, 34, 82, 88, 101
Leib ben Volf, Moshe, 78–79
Leibowitz, Nechama, 83
Leon of Modena, 82, 83
Levi (Talmudic sage), 35–36
Levi, Primo, 135, 137
Leviticus, 20, 21–22

Levy, Richard and Beatrice, 143
Lewis, Agnes, 40
Lilith magazine, 151
Lissitzky, El, 164
Lubavitch Haggadah versions, 141–42
Luria, Isaac Ashkenazi (Ari), 82

maggid section, 35, 43, 45, 134
Maharal of Prague, 82
Maimonides, Moses, 44–46, 131
Malinowski, Bronislaw, 1
Manger, Itik, 164
manna: in Birds’ Head Haggadah, 50; evoked in local seder customs, 92
Mansour, Eli, 141
Marathi, Haggadah written in Hebrew and, 16, 85
Marks, David Wolf, 93–94
maror, 43, 82, 148. See also bitter herbs Marum family, 53–54
master of the seder. See ba’al Haseder matzah: Abarbanel’s commentary on, 82; Bene Israel Jews of India and, 85; in Birds’ Head Haggadah, 50; blessing before eating, 8, 43, 55; breaking in half, 8, 43, 88, 137; Christian accusations about, 52; in concentration camp, 122–23; early decorative motifs for, 47; eaten with lamb at the Temple, 22; eating retrieved half, 8, 39; in Elie Wiesel’s Haggadah, 136; in home ceremony of Tosefta, 26; in illuminated Haggadot, 50, 51; illustrators borrowing images of, 76; in Mishnah version of ceremony, 27, 29; in new practices after destruction of Second Temple, 24; pile of three, 88; precise instructions for, 9; in sandwich of bitter herbs and charoset, 8, 43, 51, 135–36; in Sarajevo Haggadah, 54–55; supermarket Haggadah with coupon for,
5; symbolic meanings of, 30,
55, 88; in Washington Haggadah, 62. See also afikomen matzah snatching, 33–34. See also afikomen
Maxwell house coffee Haggadot:
Amazon sales of 2019 version, 140, 192n2; author’s collection of, 2–3; history of, 73– 74; retranslated in English in 2011, 74–75; used by many Conservative Jews, 109; used by many Orthodox Jews,
110–11
Ma’yan, annual women’s seders
of, 151
medieval illuminated Haggaddot, 46–49
Medved, Michael, 145
Menachem, scribe of Birds’
Head Haggadah, 50
menorah: outside one’s home, 72; Podwal’s contrasting illustrations of, 138
Mereimar, 33
Merian, Matthaeus, 75
Messer, Tamar, 14
Messiah, 52, 131
messianic ages, 55, 76, 118, 134, 172
Michaelson, Jay, 139
microcalligraphy, 143
Midrash, 24, 37–39; dropped from 1907 Union Haggadah, 95; feminist, 150; four sons and, 38–39, 50–51; symbolic meaning of charoset and, 36
minhag, 92
Miriam’s Cup, 98, 152, 155
Mishnah, 24, 27–32; on charo-set not commanded by the Torah, 35; Dropsie Haggadah with similarity to, 41–42; engaging with older Passover symbols, 30; on Passover story line, 35; sometimes confirmed by rabbis of the Talmud,
34; Tosefta ceremony
compared to, 29
Mishneh Torah of Maimonides, 44
mnemonic for steps of seder, 43
Moriah, Avner, 14, 143
Moses: in Amsterdam Haggadah,
71; in Birds’ Head
Moses (continued)

Haggadah, 50, 52; as hero of Jewish labor movement, 106; image in 1695 Amsterdam Haggadah, 80; image in King James Bible, 79; Maimonides on role of Moses in Haggadah, 44–45; in Sarajevo Haggadah, 54; as social activist in Reconstructionist Haggadah, 108; story of exodus and, 19, 20

Moss, David, 143–44

Mount Sinai, 21, 55

Ms. magazine, 151

musical content: of Guggenheim’s unpublished English version, 118; helpful notation for, 96, 116; at Holocaust memorial services, 131; in kibbutz Passover observance, 102; at Ma’yan’s annual women’s seders, 151; in pilgrimage holiday at Temple, 22; in Union Haggadah, 96.

See also songs

My People’s Passover Haggadah, 83–84

Naharin, Ohad, 163

Nathan ben Rabbi Salomo, 116

Natronai, Rabbi defending Babylonian Haggadah, 42

Nazis: attempted theft of Sarajevo Haggadah, 57; depicted in Sheinson’s Haggadah, 128;

Guggenheim’s flight from, 117–18; style labeled degenerate art by, 115; Syzk’s artwork alerting world to threat of, 119, 121; Zuckerman’s trust in God to determine fate of, 126

Neue Sachlichkeit (new objectivity), 115

New Haggadah of Mordecai Kaplan, 108–9

“Next year in Jerusalem”: in Birds’ Head Haggadah, 53; in Guggenheim’s Haggadot, 116–17, 118; omitted by Cokie and Steve Roberts, 117; removed from Union Haggadah, 95; restored in New Union Haggadah, 97–98; in twentieth-century variations on Haggadah, 93

A Night to Remember: A Haggadah of Contemporary Voices, 137

Nimrod, Naomi, 151, 152

“Notes on Akiba” (Kushner), 10

Numbers, biblical book of, 22

Off Our Backs, 150

Oppenheimer banking family, 13–14

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
oral tradition, 11–12; of Passover ritual after destruction of the Temple, 26; practices preserved as, 92; still dominant in eleventh century, 42–43
orange on seder plate, 157; as feminist innovation, 98, 145–46, 152; in GLBT Haggadah, 155, 156; representing Judaism that welcomes diversity, 146
Oren, Rony, 143
Orthodox Judaism, 16, 107, 110–12; liberal adherents of, 134, 148; resistance to Holocaust references in Haggadot, 133. See also Hasidic Haggadot pairs, danger of, 34–35
Paley, Grace, 151
Paley, Nina, 140
paper cutting, 143
Papo, Mira, 57–58
Parisian Haggadah of 1869, 88
parodies of Haggadot, 99–100
Passover Haggadah: The Feast of Freedom, 110
Passover in Egypt, 20
Passover of the Generations, 21
Passover pilgrimage to the Temple, 22–23; destruction of Temple and, 24–26; as powerful group religious experience, 25, 166–67. See also sacrifice of lambs pedagogical imperfections of Haggadah, 167–68
People of the Book (Brooks), 59–60
Podwal, Mark, 14, 138
Pogrebin, Letty Cottin, 151
Portman, Natalie, 165
potato chip on seder plate, 154
Prague Haggadah of 1526, 88
printed Haggadot, 67–89; borrowed images in, 75–81; commentaries in, 81–84; emerging despite destruction of presses, 69; explanations in, 86–89, 116; first known example of, 69; influence of Amsterdam Haggadah of 1695, 69–70; promotional materials in, 70–75; rabbis invited to introduce specific versions, 69; rapidly increasing number of versions, 68; significant early examples of, 67; songs included in, 161–65; of translations, 84–86, 87–88. See also Amsterdam Haggadah of 1695 promotional materials, 70–75
Provencali family, 65
Psalms: Hallel selection of, 27, 28, 34; in home ceremony of Mishnah, 27, 42; in home ceremony of Tosefta, 26; in Passover at Temple in Jerusalem, 22; recited from memory by Sharansky in Siberia, Psalm (continued)
126; in traditional Haggadah, 8, 9; vengeance as theme in, 64, 186n22

Purim, 76

Rabban Gamaliel the Younger, 30, 42
Rabinowicz, Rachel Anne, 110
Rav Sheshet, 33
Rav Yosef, 33
reclining. See leaning (reclining) Reconstructionist Judaism, 16, 107–9
Reform Haggadot, 16, 90–91, 92–98; of 2012 with attention to Holocaust, 137–38; British, 93–94; Union Haggadah versions, 94–98
Reform Jews, holding one seder on first night, 187n1 refugees: Israeli Haggadot bringing awareness to, 156–57; students creating Haggadot to address, 161; Trump administration and, 157–58
Regelson, Abraham, 111
Reisinger, Dan, 110
Religious Liberty (sculpture by Moses Ezekiel), 96
The Republican Haggadah, 158–59
revenge (vengeance): New Union Haggadah of 1974 and, 97; Szyk's belief in, 121;
text expressing a wish for, 7–8, 64; as theme in psalms, 64, 186n22; Zuckerman's trust in God to decide on, 126
Rice Paper Haggadah, 149–50
Roberts, Cokie and Steve, 117
Rose, Daniel and Joanna S., 144
Roth, Cecil, 47
Rothstein, Edward, 15–16
Rubin, Michael, 140
Russian Haggadot, 142; in women's seders, 193n16
Russian Social Democratic Workers' Party, 106
Saadya Gaon, 40, 42
Sacks, Jonathan, 83, 88–89
sacrifice of lambs: on departure from Egypt, 20; made symbolic with food and drink, 7; pilgrimage to the Temple and, 7, 22–23, 24, 166, 172; replacing Abraham's son Isaac, 19; as symbol in Mishnah Passover ceremony, 30.
See also lamb, eaten at seder
Salter, James, 4
Samuel ben Solomon, 43
sandwich of bitter herbs and charoset, 8, 43, 51, 135–36
Sarajevo Haggadah, 52, 54–60; creative works based on, 59–60; dramatic life of, 56–60; image of dark-skinned woman in, 55–56, 59
The Sayer by Lau-Lavie, 159–60

© Copyright Princeton University Press. No part of this book may be distributed, posted, or reproduced in any form by digital or mechanical means without prior written permission of the publisher.

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
Schechter, Solomon, 40–41, 44
Schechter Haggadah, 17
Schocken’s 1979 Passover Haggadah, 141
Schoenberg, E. Randol, 53
Schwesig, Karl, 125
Second Cincinnati Haggadah, 78, 78–79
second commandment, 50
secular kibbutz Haggadah, 102–3 secular third seders, 91, 93, 105–7, 146
secular Yiddish hagodes, 90–91, 93
seder: additions if falls on a Saturday night, 64–65; collapsing of time in, 21; distinctive regional customs of, 91–92; Jesus’s Last Supper and, 28–29; meaning “order,” 7; publicizing miracle of God’s rescue, 72; slavery and freedom as theme in, 6, 8; steps to be followed, 8, 43–44
Seder Eve (Oppenheim painting), 96
The Seder Masochism: A Haggadah and Anti-Haggadah, 140
seder plate: created in sixteenth century, 43; new Haggadot with unusual objects for, 154–56, 157; orange on, 98, 145–46, 152, 155, 156, 157
Sefhardic Haggadot, 16; Ethiopian Jews encouraged to conform to, 85–86; with images of stories from Genesis, 52; popular today, 141; Sarajevo Haggadah, 52, 54–60
Sefhardic Jews: English translation for, 87; exiled from Spain in 1492, 69, 169–70; Haggadot with Ladino instructions for, 84–85; of Iberian peninsula, 44; owning a Haggadah by fourteenth century, 46
September 11th Memorial Museum, 25
Serotta, Edward, 58–59
Shahn, Ben, 14, 164
Shalit, Gilad, 156, 172
Sharansky, Natan, 126
Sharett, Yehuda, 102
Sheinson, Yosef Dov, 127–30
Sheriff-Alperin, Jacob, 158–59
Shlonsky, Abraham, 135, 136
Sidi, Eliyahu, 14, 143
Silber, David, 83
Silverman, Morris, 109
Sinatra, Frank, 106
Six-Day War of 1967, Haggadot issued after, 17
sober seder, 155
social issues, seders addressing, 144–49. See also feminism socialist activists of Jewish labor movement, 105–7 socialist parodies of Haggadah, 99, 188n12
sofer, 12

For general queries contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu.
Soloveitchik, Joseph, 83
Soncino family of Guadalajara, Spain, 69
Soncino Press in Italy, 81
Song of Songs: in kibbutz Haggadah, 102; recited at seder’s end, 73 songs: Babylonian Haggadah expanded with, 44; in Holocaust Haggadah written from memory, 125; included in print Haggadot, 161–65; popular liturgical songs, 8, 9; role in keeping the Haggadah alive, 171. See also musical content Soviet persecution of Jews, 126, 142, 145, 172
Spitzer, Juliet I., 164
Steinem, Gloria, 151
Stella, Frank, 164
Stern, David, 21, 66
Strassfeld, Michael, 110 supermarket Haggadot, 2–3, 5. See also Maxwell house coffee Haggadot Sutton, David, 141
Syzk, Arthur, 14, 119
Szyk Haggadah, 119–22, 120, 171
Talmud, 24, 32–37; on angels rejoicing as Egyptians drown, 97; categories of rules debated by, 35; debate on charoset, 35–37; debate on number of cups of wine, 34–35, 133; debate on Passover story line, 35; printed with text surrounded by commentary, 81
tangerines, 146, 154
Tarfon (Talmudic sage), 34
technology: future uses for Haggadot, 172–73. See also digitization Temples in Jerusalem: day of mourning marking the destruction of, 133; destruction of Second Temple, 7, 24, 26; dream of rebuilding, 172; images in Sarajevo Haggadah, 54; Passover pilgrimage to, 7, 22–23, 166–67; priestly classes of, 88; Shavuot pilgrimage of Israelite farmers, 7, 31. See also sacrifice of lambs ten plagues: in Birds’ Head Haggadah, 50; missing from Reconstructionist Haggadah, 108; reframed as ecological disasters, 147–48; repurposed for Jewish labor movement, 107; tenth plague killing Egyptian children, 20, 76; today’s examples of, suggested by HIAS, 157–58; in traditional Haggadah, 8, 10; Union Haggadah and, 95, 97 theological imperfections of Haggadah, 168–70
third seders, 91, 93, 105–7, 146
Thomas S., 124
Thoreau, Henry, 147
Tisha B’Av (Ninth of Av), 133
tomato on seder plate, 154
Torah: books included in, 180, 182n1; burned by German Army, 57; charoset as mitzvah and, 35–36; four children with questions and, 38; most sacred commandments in, 35; museum ethics in dealing with scrolls of, 190n12; in open ark in Sarajevo Haggadah, 55; rules governing production and usage of, 11, 12–13; table ritual of Mishnah and, 27
Tosefta, 2, 4, 26–27, 29
Touster, Saul, 128–29
translations, 84–86; into English, 86, 87–88, 109; into German, 116; sometimes badly done, 86
transliterations of Hebrew: in ArtScroll Haggadot, 112; in Maxwell House Haggadah,
75; in Offenbach Haggadah,
116
Trump administration, 157–59
Tsint on di likht, in third seder,
107
Turner, Edith, 25
Turner, Victor, 25
Tzli Esh, 83
Unleavened bread, 20, 21. See also matzah
Uri L’Tzedek, 148
vegetarian Haggadah, 154–55
The Velveteen Rabbi’s Haggadah
for Pesach, 153
Venetian Haggadot, 67, 75; of 1609, 84; of 1629, 2, 83
vengeance. See revenge
(vengeance)
Vilna Gaon (Elijah Ben Solomon), 82
Vistorini, Giovanni
Domenico, 56
Walzer, Michael, 27
wandering Aramean, 31
Washington Haggadah, 60–66;
Harvard University Press facsimile edition, 65–66; humorous spirit of, 61–65; illustrated with Elijah on a donkey, 63; Library of Congress digitization of, 66;
Library of Congress facsimile edition, 65; scribe and illuminator of, 61–62
Waskow, Arthur, 146–48
When Do We Eat (film), 171
wicked daughter, in feminist Haggadah, 152
wicked son, 76, 82; in kibbutz
parody, 100
Wiener, Shmuel, 15
Wiesel, Elie, 97, 135–36, 138

INDEX
Wiesel, Moses, 71
wine: fifth cup of, 34–35, 133–34; in Greco-Roman symposium, 27; in illuminated Haggadot, 51; at Jesus’s Last Supper, 7; in Mishnah version of ceremony, 27; Talmudic debate about, 34–35, 133; in Tosefta version of ceremony, 26; in Washington Haggadah, 62. See also four cups of wine Wise, Yaakov, 14
wise son, 38–39, 76, 83; as computer geek, 143
Wolff, Barbara, 14, 144
Woman in Gold (film), 53 women: as editors of Haggadot, 110; Passover commentaries by, 83–84; seders at Yale University for, 83. See also feminism woodcuts, 68, 69, 114, 115, 128
Yaari, Abraham, 15
Yemen, 44, 156
Yerushalmi, Yosef Hayim, 15, 171
Yiddish: Haggadot including translation into, 84; Haggadot printed in, 73; of immigrants to North America, 105–6; of Sheinson’s Haggadah for Holocaust survivors, 127–28; socialist parodies of Haggadah in, 188n12; socialist parodies of Haggadah written in, 99; spoken by immigrants to America, 91
Yiddish stage, 106
Yudlov, Yitzhak, 15
Zangwill, Israel, 86
Zeta-Jones, Catherine, 60
Zevach Pesach (Passover Sacrifice), 82–83, 169–70
Zion, Mishael, 137, 141
Zion, Noam, 137, 141
Zionism: Haggadot focused on establishing a Jewish homeland and, 172; Haggadah for Holocaust survivors and, 128; Hatikva as anthem of First Zionist Congress, 109; Labor Zionist Alliance, 105–6; range of stances toward, 93; Szyk’s promotion of, 121, 122
Zuckerman, Aryeh Ludwig, 125, 126
Zweig, Stefan, 118