CONTENTS

Preface xi
Acknowledgments xv

PART I CONSERVATISM’S FORERUNNERS

One. Critics of Revolution 3

i. The Hard Authority of Punishment and Soft Authority of Custom: Maistre and Burke 3

ii. The Call of Faith and Beauty: Chateaubriand 18

iii. Order in Nations and among Nations: Gentz 25

iv. Revolution to Prevent Revolution: Madison 31

v. What the Critics Left to Conservatism 36

PART II
WHAT CONSERVATISM IS

Two. Character, Outlook, and Labelling of Conservatism 41

i. Conservatism as a Political Practice 41

ii. The Conservative Outlook 48

iii. Conservative and Liberal Outlooks Contrasted 50

iv. Bonding Spaces for Conservatives with Liberals 54

v. The Adaptability of Conservative Ideas 56

vi. “Conservatism,” “the Right,” and Other Label Troubles 58

vii. Dilemmas for Conservatives 62

viii. Fighting for a Tradition 65
PART III
CONSERVATISM’S FIRST PHASE (1830–80):
RESISTING LIBERALISM

The Year 1830  71

Three. Parties and Politicians: A Right without Authority  72
   i. Improvisations of the French Right  74
   ii. The British Right’s Divided Heart: Peel or Disraeli  80
   iii. German Conservatives without Caricature  88
   iv. United States: Whigs and Jacksonians; Republicans and Democrats  96

Four. Ideas and Thinkers: Turning Reason against Liberalism  108
   i. Constitutions for Unacceptable Ends: Calhoun  111
   ii. Reason for the Right Replaces Nostalgia: Stahl  117
   iv. Conservatism’s Need for Intellectuals: Coleridge’s Clerisy  137
   v. Against Liberal Individualism: Stephen, Gierke, and Bradley  142

PART IV
CONSERVATISM’S SECOND PHASE (1880–1945):
ADAPTATION AND COMPROMISE

The Year 1880  159

Five. Parties and Politicians: Authority Recovered and Squandered  160
   i. The Moderate Right in France’s Third Republic  164
   ii. British Conservatives Adapt  175
   iii. The Ambivalence of German Conservatives  186
   iv. The American Nonexception  194
Six. Ideas and Thinkers: Distrust of Democracy and of Public Reason 205

i. Defending Capitalism: Mallock, Sumner, and Schumpeter 207

ii. Six Ways to Imagine the People: Treitschke, Le Bon, Du Camp, Adams, Mencken, and Sorel 221

iii. Cultural Decline and Ethical Anomie: Jünger and Other Germans, Drieu la Rochelle, the Southern Agrarians, and Eliot 242

iv. Funeral Oratory for Liberal Democracy: Schmitt and Maurras 255

PART V

CONSERVATISM’S THIRD PHASE (1945–80): POLITICAL COMMAND AND INTELLECTUAL RECOVERY

The Year 1945 267

Seven. Parties and Politicians: Recovering Nerve and Rewinning Power 269

i. Normality, Pride, and Rage in France: Pinay, de Gaulle, and Poujade 271

ii. Tory Wets and Dries in Britain: Macmillan to Thatcher 277

iii. Remaking the German Middle Ground: Adenauer and Christian Democracy 282

Eight. Ideas and Thinkers: Answering Liberal Orthodoxies 295

i. Herald of the Hard Right: Powell 297

ii. Our Conservative Second Nature: Gehlen 300

iii. The Liberal Moderns’ Fall from Grace: Weaver, Voegelin, and MacIntyre 305

iv. Winning the US Stage: Kirk, Buckley, and Kristol 315 PART VI

CONSERVATISM’S FOURTH PHASE (1980–THE PRESENT):
HYPER-LIBERALISM AND THE HARD RIGHT

The Year 1980 327

Nine. Parties and Politicians: Letting in the Hard Right 328

i. The Center-Right in the 1980s and 1990s 329

ii. The Rise of the Hard Right: The Le Pens, AfD, Brexit, and Trump 339

iii. The Theme Music of the Hard Right: Decline, Capture, Enemies, and Victimhood 349

iv. What Populism Is and Isn’t 354

Ten. Ideas and Thinkers: Yes or No to a Hyper-liberal Status Quo 362

i. Right-Wing Liberals, Antiglobalists, and Moral-Cultural Conservatives 364

ii. The Hard Right in the American Grain: Buchanan, the Paleos, and Dreher 367

iii. The New Voices of the Right in Germany and France 374

iv. Three Unreconciled Thinkers: Finnis, Scruton, and Sloterdijk 383

v. For the Status-Quo: Pragmatism, the Via Media, Anxiety, or “Realism” 406

CODA: CHOICES FOR THE RIGHT 415

Appendix A: Conservative Keywords 419

Appendix B: Philosophical Sources of Conservative Thought 424

Appendix C: Conservative Lives: A Gazetteer 428

Works Consulted 467

Index of Names 495

Index of Subjects 507
Critics of Revolution

i. The Hard Authority of Punishment and the Soft Authority of Custom: Maistre and Burke

Conservatism, like liberalism, has no Decalogue, no College for the Propagation of the Faith, no founding Declaration of Independence, and no doctrinal compendium to match the Marx-Engels Standard Edition. Into that gap, at the end of the nineteenth century, when conservatives were hunting for an intellectual tradition, the writings of Edmund Burke (1729–97) on the French Revolution were rediscovered as a rich and ever-giving second best. Burke’s themes—the authority of tradition, the folly of political intellectuals who ignored tradition, and the organic but vulnerable character of society—were singled out as dialectical weaponry.

Burke’s writings gave conservatism in retrospect, particularly conservatism in Britain and the United States, a tone of balance, openness to facts, and all-round moderation that stood out in contrast to the blind zeal of conservatism in France and Germany. The works of Joseph de Maistre (1753–1821), a Savoyard lawyer and exile from the French Revolution, were commonly cited to illustrate the extreme, unbridled character of the continental right. Burke bequeathed to Anglo-American conservatism a tone of enlightened good sense and worldly-wise competence. Maistre became the Counter-Enlightenment forerunner of right-wing authoritarians and fascists. This contrast sees too much of the early twentieth century in the late eighteenth. It relies on selective editing and neglects telling elements that the thinkers shared. Maistre was never going to sit well in conservatism’s front parlor but belongs in the household as much as Burke.
Maistre and Burke each had unusual rhetorical power and a rare gift of phrase. Maistre argued in black and white with Manichean ferocity. He drove contrasts to extremes and stretched good points past breaking. “Every government is despotic: the only choice is to obey or rebel.” “The only institutions that last are religious.” “Liberty was always the gift of kings.” As if to seize back the guillotine from unworthy hands, he wrote of the scaffold’s sacredness and the hangman’s piety. Burke’s writings, which often began as speeches, were less angry and more to the English taste. His targets—religious enthusiasm, political intellectualism, legal codification—were welcome to ears at ease in their world and suspicious of meddling questioners. Burke’s irony was parliamentary and teasing; Maistre’s, wounded and, like Jonathan Swift’s, savage. Maistre was a lawyer. Burke studied law. Neither argued as philosophers, although Burke had so argued when younger in his attack on the thought that there were presocial people, and when establishing the sublime among the categories of aesthetics. On political topics, Burke’s favorite argumentative pace was presto, and he could be vicious as well as lyrical. The Boston council was “vermin”; the commoners of 1789 were like “a gang of Maroon slaves suddenly broke loose from the house of bondage.”

Both he and Maistre were social outsiders. Burke was a Dublin-born commoner of Anglo-Irish parentage. Maistre was a member of the provincial administrative nobility from Savoy, the French-speaking part of a northern Italian kingdom that had bounced back and forth between France, Spain, Austria, and fragile independence since the sixteenth century. As workaday officials or servants to political masters, both wrote of politics from the inside.

Both thinkers suffered a long decline and slow recovery in their reputations. William Gladstone read Burke through (as he did most things), and Burke had a following among bookish American Whigs, notably Rufus Choate (1799–1859), who ranked him with Homer, Cicero, and John Milton as required reading to “liberalize” the study of politics and law. Walter Bagehot, by contrast, ranked Burke as an early influence on conservatism lower than Pitt the Younger. T. E. Kebbel’s A History of Toryism (1886), one of the tradition’s first scholarly surveys, mentioned Burke only in passing.
In the liberal ascendency of the 1830s, criticisms of the French Revolution of the kind Burke and Maistre had made were widely felt to have missed their historical mark. Blackening “constitutional” 1789 with the “popular-despotic” 1793–94 and treating the Revolution as a single criminal folly were unconvincing, given how widely the gains of 1789 were accepted and how even the Restoration had not reversed the French middle classes’ economic gains. As for the Terror, Maistre and Burke had grasped the self-defeating character of revolutionary excess, which made sustained opposition look redundant. The Revolution, to Maistre, was “a monstrous interlude” in an otherwise reasonable and virtuous national history, albeit an interlude with a purpose. As “divine chastisement,” the Revolution had purged and rescued France. Recast in terms of his God-governed history, Maistre was echoing Burke’s insight into the self-curing character of revolutionary delusion. For the Jacobins, the Revolution itself, Burke wrote, was “just punishment for their success.” The liberal middle classes of the 1830s and 1840s did not need reminding that Terror was bad, the wrong way to govern, and, above all, self-destructive.

Neither Burke nor Maistre believed that people in general were capable of self-government, though for different reasons. Maistre took a bleak view of unregenerate humanity. It could never be relied on to keep the rules and it needed harsh discipline and submissive faith together with the threat of swift punishment. Burke was sunnier in his philosophical anthropology. Unlike Maistre, he made no sweeping factual claim that, given a chance, people were free riders (who recognized rules but counted on others to keep them) or wantons (who recognized no rules). The trouble with trusting people to govern themselves lay for Burke not in their inability to keep rules but in their incapacity to make rules. For nobody, strictly, made rules. To think so was the intellectualist mistake of declaration writers and legal codifiers. Rules emerged from custom, and the customs that endured were those that suited a society and its people.

Whether the rules of society came from a divine source, as Maistre insisted, or from custom, as Burke held, their origins were closed to intelligent enquiry. Divine providence was for Maistre inscrutable. The roots of custom were for Burke obscure. Neither could be argued with and made to yield up a standpoint of criticism for the rules they had generated. Without “ancient opinions and rules of life,” Burke wrote, “we have no compass to govern us” and no longer know “to what port to steer.” Try as they might, intellectualists in politics could not escape that difficulty. So each claimed.

Neither God’s providence nor custom, however, could be relied on alone for social order. Both Maistre and Burke thought a common faith guided and sustained by an established church was also needed. Each recognized the usefulness of religion as a social expedient. Burke made the point soothingly: “The consecration of the state by a state religious establishment is necessary also to operate with a wholesome awe upon free citizens.” In a letter in 1815, Maistre declared much the same about faith’s utility in terms cynical enough to shock a secularist: “If I were an atheist and a sovereign, . . . I would declare the Pope infallible . . . for the establishment and the safety in my states.”

After the Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars, the first conservatives asked themselves whether the turmoil, suffering, and criminal excess had been due to liberty or to its perversion. Burke mildly and Maistre savagely had blamed modern liberty, that is, liberty understood in the wrong way. It was plain to Burke that, once freed from custom and good sense, people were capable of the worst follies and crimes. Maistre thought the same once people were freed from God and his earthly ministers. The foe for Burke was unrestricted, goalless dissent; for Maistre, satanically proud disobedience. For both, mistaken liberty led morally to bewilderment, politically to revolution, breakdown, and counterrevolution. Whether for Burke in this world or for Maistre in a next world, disruptive modern liberty made human life not better, but worse.

Maistre’s and Burke’s ideas ran side by side into the tradition of conservative thought that was later labelled anti-rationalist. They did not merge. Burke proscribed political reasoning that judged customary arrangements by insecure external standards. He trusted to common morality and social habit that doing without critical reason of the unwanted kind could yet be reasonable. Maistre proscribed reasoning in politics as such, celebrating instead faith and obedience. The less reasonable anti-reason could be, particularly the more offensive to Enlightened opinion, the more Maistre relished the shock.

In this regard, Burke was more open. In politics, he allowed for faction, argument, and disagreement. He spoke loudly against disrupters who sought to leap out of the frame of common assumptions that made argument possible. That aspect in Burke pointed to eventual accommodation also with liberal diversity. Burke insisted on the need for shared customs and a common faith within a unified society, without which, argument risked slipping into intellectual warfare.

Maistre, by contrast, wanted from politics authority and obedience. His anti-rationalist legacy passed to authoritarian, illiberal conservatism. The legacy runs to Charles Maurras, Georges Sorel, Carl Schmitt, and latter-day right-wing populists. The authority each appealed to varied: for Maistre, the Pope; for Maurras, a French monarch; for Sorel, the disaffected working class; for Schmitt, a temporary dictator; for present-day right-wing populists, “the people,” understood as excluding those with views populists dislike as well as elites whom populists of like background seek to replace.

What each of these thinkers wanted from authority was an argument-ender that would cut off debate and silence disagreement. They wanted something that, in the liberal view, would shut down politics itself, because politics to liberals meant unending dispute in a diverse society. The liberal side of Burkeanism could eventually come to terms with that picture of politics as argument. To the Maistrian side, the liberal picture was wrong in whole and part. No reconciliation was possible. Maistre has appealed to the rejectionist element in conservatism and to its authoritarian fringe, as well as to cultural anti-moderns like Charles Baudelaire, Friedrich Nietzsche, and their descendants, who relished his mocking disdain.

Unlike Burke, who saw them from the safety of Westminster, revolution and war made Maistre an exile. In 1792, French troops occupied Savoy, part of a dynastic kingdom that included Piedmont and Sardinia. As judge and senator, Maistre feared himself a marked man and fled. Years of wandering began in Switzerland and Italy. After Napoleon Bonaparte’s victories, when Austria ceded its Italian territories to France, the Savoy court decamped to Sardinia. Maistre followed, picturing the rest of his life as that of “an oyster stuck to a rock.” In 1802, he was sent to Russia as an envoy. His job was to plead for money and status on behalf of a crown without a kingdom. The Russians had more pressing worries but approved a small subsidy. Many small countries or minor powers were tinder that reignited war after moments of exhaustion in the long European conflict (1792–1815)—Sweden, Canada, Portugal, and the Romanian lands. Sardinia was too small to bother with. Once they grasped how little their island kingdom counted, Maistre’s employers in Cagliari cut his pay and told him to shorten his dispatches. Often Maistre ate his servant’s soup. In such conditions, Maistre wrote his best-remembered works.

At evening by the Neva River, in the Petersburg Dialogues (published posthumously in 1821), a worldly senator, a Catholic nobleman, and a count argue out the problem of evil: how to reconcile belief in an omniscient, well-meaning God with the fact of human suffering. Maistre’s younger brother, Xavier, an army officer and author of a satire on the Grand Tour, Journey around My Room (1794), may have written the descriptive prelude, on the charm of Russian summer nights, which lulls readers for the sustained dialectical skirmish to follow. With more wit and oratory than close argument, the count, speaking for Maistre, puts forth the old Christian answer that human suffering, even undeserved suffering, had its place in an inscrutable divine plan. For God’s justice, though perfect, was slow. In human eyes, the innocent suffer and malefactors go free. It may not look it, but on God’s plan every ill was compensated for and every crime punished, so long as time was allowed. As a rationale for a moral economics of retributive and compensatory justice, such argument was never going to win adepts in the early nineteenth century, when philosophers were commonly looking for a naturalistic, post-theological grounding to morality. The Dialogues contain also Maistre’s sallies against Francis Bacon’s mechanistic world picture and John Locke’s empiricist account of the mind, English thinkers he wished had thought more like Burke.
Of more political moment were Maistre’s critique of the Revolution and his constitutional thinking found in the earlier works, Considerations on France (1796–97) and The Generative Principle of Constitutions and Other Human Institutions (1814). The Revolutionary Terror was God’s punishment for Enlightenment denial of faith. Once purged in blood, France merited salvation and was duly rescued by the European allies from Napoleonic captivity. The Enlightenment took a callow view of humanity’s preoccupations and capacities that ignored its irrationality and violence, as well as its need for sacrifice, obedience, and submission. There were no presocial humans, but neither was humankind one society. There was no “man in general,” only particular men belonging to one of many national types.

Maistre took his predecessors’ lessons and drove them to the limit. With David Hume he agreed that feeling, not reason, underlay political obligation, yet what Maistre meant was not worldly prudence and sensible habit, as with Hume, but human self-abnegation and the solidarity of collective guilt. Burke noted that some obligations were not chosen. Maistre insisted that none of our deeper obligations were chosen. Endurance in a human institution was evidence of divine—that is, ungraspable—origin and whatever the human mind could not grasp should not be touched. A state did not win credit by support from an established church; rather, the state itself should make itself sacrosanct. Nations did not have constitutions, let alone write them. Habits, manners, and norms constituted a nation. The most authoritative law was unwritten law. There was no humankind, only the French, Spanish, English, and Russians. Politically, Maistre, following Burke, claimed to reject ideal constructions but insisted that theocracy was the best form of government. Social order was unachievable without an undivided, sovereign power submitted to unquestionably in a latter-day equivalent of religious awe. Institutions could not survive if they were subject to impious doubt: “If you wish to conserve all, consecrate all.” Obedience to authority, whether from faith or fear, must be blind and unquestioning, at the risk, otherwise, of anarchy. Maistre’s shadeless picture of politics and society was too stark ever to serve as conservatism’s official portrait. His overblackened picture of unregenerate, undependable humankind was still a conservative one. It stood out against the liberal picture, which allowed for human improvability and progress. That liberals could and often did oversweeten their picture in no way erased the contrast.

Readers who come to Burke’s works for the first time are struck by their rhetorical power, fertility of metaphor, and subtlety of argumentative suggestion. They are also struck that many or most of the contemporary traditions that Burke was defending as essential to the well-being of society—a dominant landed interest, limited suffrage, an authoritative national church—are long gone. Indeed, they were going or had gone by the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, by which time conservatives, particularly those in Britain, began to rediscover a forgotten Burke and adopt him as their intellectual godfather. Scared by the Paris Commune (1871) and prodded by Taine’s counter-revolutionary history of modern France, conservatives revived Burke’s Reflections on the Revolution in France (1790) as the nearest thing to a founding text. Grand as it is, the work raises a second puzzle, which is, how, for all its literary brilliance, an occasional and in ways polemical work should have earned its high place in conservative thought.

Burke’s topical attack on the French Revolution took aim at intellectuals in politics and at the holders of public debt. Burke’s “political men of letters” had come to the fore as shapers of public opinion for a growing and demanding readership. The state’s creditors had sought profits in lending against the security of nationalized church lands. Intellectuals, tied to no particular class or interest, were prone to indeterminate ideals and callow impracticality. Self-seeking creditors, often foreigners, were anonymous and without stake in France’s institutions. Both intellectuals and financiers were given to experiment and innovation, with unpredictable but, as Burke also insisted, reliably grim results. The intellectuals were unflightworthy “aeronauts,” both foolhardy and out of touch. Their carping undermined the twin guardians of social “manners” and public faith on which a decent commercial society depended: an open, economically productive aristocracy and a tutelary church. Right or not on those requirements for a decent commercial society, Burke recognized the indecent kind, well aware of what the colonial rapine by come-and-go fortune hunters had done to Indian society.

The political men of letters in Burke’s picture had griped and exaggerated, without presenting a viable alternative. They had delegitimized one institution after another by sapping public faith in social artifice and ignoring the need for a “veil” of unreflecting custom to cloak destructive natural passions. The financiers in their turn had abetted a perilous financial scheme that brought France a ruinous inflation and wrecked public confidence in the state’s fiscal responsibility. France’s innovators, in sum, had together destroyed the moral authority and monetary trust on which social order depended.

Drawing on a classical sequence of constitutional decline familiar since the Greeks, Burke foresaw growing instability and a descent into anarchy that would be met by popular disorder, growing violence, and, eventually, military rule. Burke’s awesome vision, fixed and clear when he began to write late in 1789, struck readers across Europe as prophetic. His reputation as the seer of war, Terror, and Napoleon lent him continent-wide credit in the 1790s but obscured his wider life and writings.

Burke was an outsider who advanced by superabundant talent and good connections in service to the Marquess of Rockingham, a Whig grandee and leader of the anti-ministerial faction in parliament. The Rockingham Whigs wanted to preserve oligarchic government in the interests of landowners and commerce. They were hostile to crown attempts under reforming ministers to limit their power. When Burke spoke of defending tradition, he had that conflict in mind.

A confessional Gemini by family background, Burke had been born in Dublin to a Protestant father and Roman Catholic mother. After Trinity College, the city’s Anglican and only university, he studied law in London and made his literary and philosophical name before he was thirty with works that nourished his responses to the Revolution. The ironically entitled Vindication of Natural Society (1756) satirized the idea that there had ever been presocial people or that people could be coherently imagined as outside or detached from some particular society. Burke’s essay Of the Sublime and Beautiful (1757) invoked a familiar distinction between the social passion of love and the self-preserving passion of fear in order to enrich the conceptual resources of aesthetics. To love of beauty, Burke added an engaging astonishment at the sublime, that is, at scenes or objects that strike us as overscaled, obscure, or overpowering. In astonishment, an image arises for us of threatened pain at a safe distance, and we sense “tranquillity shadowed with horror.” Burke impressed most who met him with his eloquence and argumentative fertility. He became the editor for the Annual Register, a yearly review of politics and intellectual life, which he oversaw for many years. In 1765 he obtained a seat in parliament, where he sat till 1794.

Burke was a thinker-advocate, each task locked to the other. As the agent for the New York assembly, he spoke up for its protests against British taxation and in 1775 called for reconciliation in speeches on the American colonies. In ways, Burke was a modernizer and reformer. He wanted a lessening of disabilities for Irish Catholics and a reduction in tariffs so as to collect more revenue from taxes, as well as a cutting of the royal payroll and cleaning up military patronage. In 1783, he and his then ally Charles James Fox wanted the government to wrest the administration of India from the irresponsible, rapacious East India Company. After their bill failed, Burke began a nine-year campaign to impeach the company’s governor for malfeasance.

In other ways, Burke was behind his times. He feared the democratization of government and opinion. He rejected John Wilkes’s radical proposal for more direct representation by binding members of parliament with written instructions. Burke was leery of banking, which he saw as a spur to “innovation” and a corrupting paymaster for its political friends. Of mobile capital, he wrote: “Being of recent acquisition, it falls in more naturally with any novelties. . . . The kind of wealth which will be resorted to by all who wish for change.” That the wealthy should be taxed to reduce poverty Burke thought absurd. Cut the throats of all the rich, Burke wrote, and share what they eat in a year, and it still would not serve. He came to see the slave trade as abhorrent and thought it must end in time. Meanwhile it should be humanized by a code of treatment, not abolished. Among Burke’s ideas for improving slaves’ lives, drafted in 1780 and sent to a correspondent in 1792, were clothes for them on slave ships, schooling for slave children, Sundays off, and lashes limited to thirteen at a time. Burke was for religious liberty but spoke against extending it to Unitarian dissenters, who denied the orthodox doctrine of the Trinity.

The scholar’s Burke has been freed in recent decades from his reputational jail as the French Revolution’s scold. For most conservatives, he remains the author of the Reflections. Without them, people would say what Burke said of Bolingbroke, the Tory butt of his Vindication, “Who reads him today?” France made and shaped the conservative Burke in reverse. On a visit to Paris in 1773, he marveled at the eighteen-year-old dauphiness but found the godless levity of his intellectual hosts offensive. In May and June 1789, Burke greeted the French upheavals as a “wonderful spectacle.” By late summer, when the king’s party was in retreat, he turned hostile, provoked partly by the enthusiasm of British radicals. It took his rhetorical skill to balance the jarring claims that Britain should mortally fear a revolution to which, in its stolidity, it was immune.

The authentic, scholar’s Burke says too much to be politically useful. “The only specimen of Burke is all that he wrote,” Hazlitt quipped in 1807. The first task in creating a useable Burke was accordingly to cherry pick. Burke’s copiousness was here an asset, and noticed early. No politician of whatever party, Thomas Moore wrote in 1825, finds himself in “any situation for which he could not select some golden sentence from Burke” to strengthen his argument or “adorn it by fancy.”

A second task was to purge the Burkean critique of exaggeration. Maistre’s exaggerations were naked and cried out to be scoffed at. Burke’s were more suggestive and insinuating: the Terror was as good as fated in 1789, radicals are all revolutionaries, social criticism of any kind is either folly or betrayal, and reform reliably overruns and defeats itself. Although Burke hinted more than stated, exaggeration of that kind became a heady part of what the American political scholar Albert O. Hirschman aptly called “the rhetoric of reaction.”

A third task was to rescue Burkeanism from the defense of the undefendable: not simply from the vain defense of what Britain’s right-wing Whigs were seeking to preserve from the 1770s through the 1790s, but from the vain defense of any passing and unstable status quo. The task was to find in Burke's writing answers to the question that recurs for conservatives in capitalist modernity: in an ever-shifting society, where there is never dependable ground underfoot, what can and must be rescued?

Rather than as a guide to the kinds of policy to follow or the types of institution to protect, Burkeanism was accordingly recast so as to offer higher-order, reusable advice in changing circumstances. The advice focused on the prudent management of unavoidable change in order to limit its social disruptiveness. Less was said about the hard part of identifying which values had to be defended. Burkeanism of this second-order kind is rightly thought of as a historically relative Utilitarianism, cast in negative terms: minimize disruption according to what the standards of the day find disruptive.

The distinctive maxims of that higher-order Burkeanism turned on tradition, ignorance, and the vital but vulnerable character of human sociability. By “tradition” was meant norms or institutions handed down from past generations that people at present had a duty to uphold and pass on in good shape. However opaque their origin, the endurance of traditions was first-pass evidence of their legitimacy: “That which might be wrong in the beginning is consecrated by time and becomes lawful.” If a tradition was in question, the burden of proof was on its questioner, not the other way around.

Humans’ knowledge of themselves and, second, their society was imperfect. Not only were they complex by nature, society itself was growing complex. Prudence called on them not to pretend to know more about either than they did know. It enjoined against making a habit of faultfinding in society and then hunting for cures to overdrawn ills that sped change and often made things worse. Faultfinding suffered typical flaws: it relied on “abstract” claims and it invoked maxims that worked in some places but not in others.

The word “abstract” is both a multipurpose philosophical term of art and a rhetorical term of abuse. Borrowing in his early philosophical writing from Locke, Burke had distinguished three sorts of abstract idea: natural kinds (trees, sheep, humans), properties (colors, shapes), and “mixed” ideas such as virtue, vice, honor, law, which matched nothing in the natural world but which brought to mind past experiences of virtuous or vicious actions, or previous encounters with, say, soldiers and magistrates. The circularity of reasoning—how might the past action be recognized as, for example, an instance of virtue?—was not convincingly answered by Burke.

In his political writing, “abstraction” became more loosely a term of criticism for the kinds of reasoning that Burke objected to in politics. One was to propose innovative arrangements that had to be talked of in “abstract” terms. Like “virtue,” for example, terms for innovative arrangements were innocently abstract in corresponding to nothing in nature. Unlike “virtue,” such terms were also culpably abstract. Because they were new, they evoked no past experiences. When an innovation of the suspect kind was spoken of, nothing graspable came to mind. Innovative talk was for Burke a kind of nonsense.

Exporting maxims from where they worked to where they did not work was the second kind of reasoning Burke proscribed. Morals and norms that served all humanity were at their most general, but their specific forms varied locally. They had all grown over time, surviving only because they suited where they grew. Uprooting them in hope they would flourish elsewhere was folly; institutions fitted their nations and were not readily copied. Efforts to speed or reverse social change were equally futile. Revolution and reaction were mirror faults.

Burke’s prime exhibit of abstraction was the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen (1789). In the declaration, the mistake of France’s intellectual men of letters was not that there were no rights—there were rights wherever there was law, and there was law wherever there was society. Those particular rights; however, had all grown up locally in civil society, as tended by an emergent law of the land. There were no uprootable, transportable rights; that is, there were no universal rights. Rights were common to a society, not to humankind.

Reform, in sum, must step away from past practice. Innovation ignored that precept and hence was bound to fail. To the fictive young French correspondent to whom Burke imagined himself writing in Reflections he said that France’s unwritten constitution had indeed fallen into disrepair but that it had not been necessary to tear down the building and find a new site. Instead, “you might have repaired those walls, you might have built on those old foundations.”

The melancholy modern record of obstinate resistance to wholesale, imposed reform followed by brutal counterresistance might seem to speak in Burke’s favor, yet his case against innovative reform relies on an unsupported, backward-looking assumption. A modern society’s judgment of whether reform is with or against the grain is seldom clear or conclusive. It is not that modern society, morally speaking, is cross-grained. Even in modernity, there can be a shared core of political morality. The trouble is that in liberal modernity how shared morality is to be applied and adjudged in given cases will always be open to argument. One group’s perilous innovation will be another’s prudent repair. Simply declaring a harmony of proper morality and custom’s lessons does not make that argument go away.

Together the bad habit of abstraction and foolish trust in innovation amounted for Burke to what has here been called intellectualism in politics. It was a fair and useful target for conservatives, who nevertheless soon had to explain how a liberal weakness for intellectualism differed from their own growing reliance on intellectuals, beginning with men like Burke. Despite a professed indifference to ideas, conservatives in time found their own political men of letters. Samuel Taylor Coleridge, as will soon be seen, was an early conservative who called for a “clerisy” of brains that, instead of dreaming up possible futures, would identify and promote the upkeep of national traditions.

Burkeanism’s third leading theme was that human sociability was universal and everywhere fragile. In whatever society people found themselves, they grew by nurture and education into a “second nature.” Burke wrote of that acquired nature as a “cloak” or “veil” of habits, attitudes, and norms. Superficial but vital, they varied from place to place. Whatever local form they took, they were needed for sociability. They might seem old and worn. They might not meet the taste of social critics. But trying to see through them or tear them away was still dangerous. Changing the material of his metaphor, Burke preferred “the rust of superstition” to bumptious critical “impiety.”
Once he was canonized for conservatism, the urge to box and re-box Burke never died. Philosophically, he was packaged as a Lockean contractualist, a Humean moral skeptic, a historically minded relativist, a natural-law theorist, or a rule Utilitarian (“In all moral machinery,” Burke wrote, “the results are the best”), perhaps both those last two together, the first in morality, the second in politics. Burke himself advanced no philosophical defense in depth of what he was about politically.

Was Burke conservative or a liberal? Of the historical Burke, the question is anachronistic. There were none of either in Burke’s day. Still, the question is not pointless, and for Burkeanism the answer is “both,” for the Burke distilled into Burkeanism attracted liberals as well as conservatives. Burke said much that right-wing liberals could agree with. Liberty required order, which required property. Tampering with trade was generally a mistake. Many of our duties were unchosen duties, and people had not only rights to liberty but also due expectations for social order.

Burke, more generally, thought healthy politics should reflect society. Society was diverse and in conflict. Politics, accordingly, required faction and argument, as liberals also believed. Sovereign power, further, was necessary but capturable. Institutions for its exercise had to be arranged so that, in Burke’s words, no group or interest should “act as if it were the entire master.” Avoiding an “entire master” animated the pre-conservative James Madison in his thoughts on the United States Constitution. It underlay how the liberal François Guizot thought of sovereignty’s exercise as lying beyond the reach of any one interest or faction and as controllable in the end only by morality and law. That Burke opened paths of liberal-conservative compromise.

Conservatives, however, had fellow feeling for the less liberal, anti-cosmopolitan Burke. In international terms, he was a conservative nationalist, an early exponent of geopolitics treated as a conflict of ideologies (England, Burke wrote in 1796, “is in war against a principle”) or as a down-to-earth defender of British power concerned with efficient taxes, lively commerce, and a stable empire. The national conservative Burke stressed a common faith and shared allegiances as a framework to contain vigorous faction. He celebrated British customs and attitudes as tested by time and somehow uniquely worthy. That is the Burke who echoed in the patriotic oratory of British conservatism from Benjamin Disraeli to Stanley Baldwin and beyond. It is the Burke who warned the spirit of an American author shivering in a Scottish winter, Russell Kirk. In The Conservative Mind (1953), Kirk not only reminded American readers of Burke’s existence but also elevated him into a presiding intellectual deity of that mid-twentieth-century invention, the Anglosphere.

Burke’s concern for continuity in the morality of politics was profound and compelling. He handed down to conservatism the puzzle of how to hold to established values amid remorseless modernity. The puzzle was not strictly partisan, but conservatives, especially Burkean conservatives, made it their own. The values Burke had in mind were shared public and private duties, pieties, allegiances, and loyalties, without which, it was feared, social order in modern conditions could never stabilize. The character of the list was plain enough. Giving it actual content in their own times has occupied conservatives of Burkean mold ever since.

ii. The Call of Faith and Beauty:
Chateaubriand and Other Romantics

None of Burke’s rhetorical flights was better known than his cry of dismay on behalf of the queen when a Parisian crowd burst into the royal palace at Versailles: “I thought ten thousand swords must have leapt from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone.” That of “sophisters, economists and calculators” had succeeded. The “sentiments which beautify and soften private society” were vanishing. The decent veils of expedient belief on which social order depended, the “drapery of life” from the “wardrobe of the moral imagination,” were, Burke feared, being ripped away.

Burke’s fear echoed the alarm at social change sounded by moral satirists from Juvenal to Swift. Manners were changing, it was true, but whether manners themselves were being abandoned, as Burke seemed to suggest, was less certain. A new fashion is not nakedness. Burke’s difficulty was why one should prefer old to new manners once all manners, in the broad sense of social norms, were seen as useful pretenses. If new manners brought stability, then on Burke’s own requirements, it would seem they served as well as old manners.

Burke’s metaphor of social beliefs as clothes, later worked up by Thomas Carlyle in Sartor Resartus (1836) and before long absorbed into the sociological vernacular, had good and bad sides. The good side was that a social norm’s authority depended in part on the breadth of its credit. Norms of courtesy, reasonableness, mutual respect, and cooperation are like that. They weaken or break down when widely ignored (which is not to say they must first be widely agreed on to come into force). The bad side of the metaphor is that it threatens to turn acceptance of social norms into expedient dissembling. The metaphor blurs the fact that whereas we cannot see through clothes, we can see through beliefs. Clothes do their work for decency, although we all know what we look like naked. If, on the contrary, social norms are taken for a useful pretense that veils our primitive and asocial nature, it will be perilous to count on them to do their work for social order once the pretense is seen through and constantly remarked on. Keeping up social pretenses is harder than getting dressed in the morning. Philosophers from ancient Greece through the Christian Middle Ages had questioned the force and sources of social norms. Only in the Enlightenment with the spread of reading was the practice of asking why democratized and made part of public argument. Once it had been, as Burke acknowledged, it was difficult to stop the seed of doubt from growing and spreading. Burke’s awkward metaphor pointed to an enduring difficulty for conservatives in their contest with liberal modernity. It runs through to the present day: how can we sustain a belief that we are convinced society needs when we ourselves offer not grounds or evidence for the belief but only a conviction that the common holding of the belief is useful for social order?

Another Enlightenment Romantic and critic of the French Revolution, François-René de Chateaubriand, captured the difficulty well.
Lingering aside in distaste, he described the Restoration sacre of the last Bourbon, Charles X, by the archbishop of Reims (1825) at the cathedral where French kings had been crowned since the Middle Ages. The jostling attendance included royalist emigrés as well as veterans of the Revolution and Napoleon who had switched coats in time. Who, Chateaubriand asked, could be taken in by such a spectacle? It was "not a sacre," he wrote, "but the representation of one."

A younger son from an old Breton noble family, Chateaubriand was by turns naval cadet, apprentice courtier, American voyager, wounded volunteer in the army of the anti-Jacobin emigrés, London exile, best-selling novelist, Catholic reviver, Napoleonic envoy turned critic of the emperor, constitutional pamphleteer, founder-editor of Le Conservateur, Restoration foreign minister, knight errant for the Bourbon Ultras, liberal critic of those same Ultras, defender of the press, and internal exile from the bourgeois monarchy of Louis Philippe. From that wholly modern muddle of adventure, dissidence, and incompleteness, Chateaubriand fashioned an eighteen-hundred-page autobiography that gave shape to the tributaries, diversions, and repetitions that made up his life, the Mémoires d’outre-tombe (1849–50), which ranks with Augustine’s and Jean-Jacques Rousseau’s Confessions among masterpieces in the unconservative genre of self-invention.

Little of that, though fascinating, would have won Chateaubriand a place in the story of conservatism had he not he passed down to it a repertoire of disavowal for the “empty world” of liberal modernity and a counterpart trust in the “full heart” of faith and loyalty. Chateaubriand was a Romantic among conservatism’s anti-rationalist forerunners. He was less philosophical than Burke and, though cross about many things, not as angry as Maistre. As a child of the eighteenth century, he sought to answer disenchantment with reenchantment. Passionate attachments, he urged, counted more in life and politics than prudential reasoning or partisan obedience, a claim he pressed in Le Génie du Christianisme (1802), the book that first made his name. Friends saw in him personally a sturdy egotism. Unflatteringly for them, he himself wrote that his strongest emotion was boredom. Many questioned his sincerity, yet Chateaubriand preached his Romantic gospel of resistance to the emerging world of liberal modernity with a sense of conviction that won converts and imitators.

Politically, he called himself “Republican by nature, monarchist by reason, Bourbonist from honor.” Though too skeptical for legitimism, he shared with the Ultras their disgust at watching regicides and Bonapartists land on their feet in the post-1815 Bourbon court. Waiting in an anteroom to see Louis XVIII, as Chateaubriand described the scene in his memoirs, he watched lame Talleyrand, Napoleon’s diplomat, shuffle out of an audience with the king helped by Napoleon’s police chief, Fouché, and murmured to himself, “Vice supported on the arm of crime.” Arbitrary force repelled him, especially by power against defenseless victims. Among the strongest passages in the Mémoires is his dry but outraged account of the Duc d’Enghien’s execution, with Napoleon’s connivance, after a kangaroo trial (1804).

In Chateaubriand’s capacity to question almost everything but his own judgment, an ungenerous later French conservative, Maurras, saw a pagan libertarian. Admirers have seen in Chateaubriand’s suspicion of power a liberal streak found in the rebel Albert Camus or in the self-described Tory anarchist George Orwell.

Chateaubriand believed in a constitutional monarchy, in representative government constrained by fixed, nondemocratic institutions that were designed to ensure security of property and protect subjects from arbitrary power. He believed also in personal liberties and freedom of the press. He blamed the Revolution on royal dithering and interference, and he supported the Bourbons not from out-of-the-drawer legitimist theory but for the practical and somewhat cross-cutting reason that the dynasty had, broadly speaking, provided good rulers. After 1815 he believed in a “possible Restoration,” not in the self-defeating reaction of the Ultras. It was folly, Chateaubriand thought, to bring back old congregations, compensate property losses, restore primogeniture, muzzle the press, and make sacrilege a capital offense. To Louis de Bonald, the author of that last bill (1825), he cried in the chamber, “You reject the norms of our day to return to times we cannot even recognize.”
For all that, Chateaubriand could sound like a proto-liberal, which in a limited way he might have been, except for his distance from middle-class life and values.

Chateaubriand shared that suspicion of bourgeois society and what he took for its politics of mutual interest in an article in Le Conservateur. It contrasted a “morality of interest” with a “morality of duty.” Society could not be governed by violence, only by séduction, that is, persuasion. The persuasive force of mutual interest, it might be said, could be stronger than that of duty; for duty rested on “fiction,” whereas interest was actual. No, Chateaubriand answered. Interest was fickle and unstable, never by evening what it was in the morning, resting on no more than chance and ever fluid. There existed by contrast an unbreakable chain of duty running from families into society that tied fathers and children, kings and their subjects, into mutual obligations.

Like William Wordsworth in Britain and Adam Müller in Germany, Chateaubriand disliked the commercial society he saw eating away at an earlier, supposedly more natural way of life. The natural life was imagined socially in terms of older habits and institutions, and psychogeographically in terms of the countryside, especially wild countryside. Were that all, Chateaubriand’s writing might have gone the way of Étienne Sénancour’s Obermann and other writers of the day swept up in the Romantic idea of pure nature and tainted society. In addition, he had a hard, knowing eye for worldly affairs and an ambition, however misplaced, to fight at the top of the political game. Some saw in his obsession with Napoleon an unhinged wish to supplant Napoleon. Chateaubriand’s Romantic side, which he poured into his novels, imagined America as a Rousseau-esque open field, cherished and tended by wise original peoples. His worldly side reminded him how it was. On arrival in Delaware, he was helped on to the dock by a young black woman, to whom he gave a handkerchief, noting to himself how incongruous it was to be greeted in the land of liberty by a slave.

Le Génie du Christianisme caught a moment of religious conciliation. It was published soon after Napoleon’s Concordat with the Vatican in 1801 reestablished Roman Catholicism as the primary religion of France and permitted the return of emigré priests. Le Génie aimed to reawaken religious feeling by stressing the aesthetic aspects of Christianity and helped make it acceptable, even fashionable, in intellectual drawing rooms. It contributed to the Catholic revival after 1815, when peace returned, military careers closed, and a religious calling looked again to be a fair alternative among the upper classes.

As a Counter-Enlightenment manifesto for the beauties of the Christian faith, Le Génie tied together Romantic longing, contempt for bourgeois worldliness, and Catholic lessons in piety and humility. By rejecting false gods, Christianity had ended our intellectual infancy but compensated us for the loss of childish wonder. By chasing divinities from the woods and returning nature to its solitude, Christianity had given us an object of solace, contemplation, and religious awakening. Worldly busyness and its reductive understanding of life had limits. We needed ritual. Whether classical or Christian, ritual appealed to us in its poetry. Nothing was lovely, winning, or beautiful without an element of mystery. Religion deepened art by pointing us toward ideals that could be intuited, not justified. Last, self-assertive mockery was corrosive and deadening. Among the enemies of Christian piety from the start had been sectarians, sophists, and the frivolous who “destroy everything with laughter.” Christianity, into the bargain, had served sound government and blessed the forgiveness of enemies in the cause of national reconciliation.

The topics that moved Chateaubriand and that were widely anthologized from the six-part Génie were ruins, oceans, feast days, church bells, and love of nation. That last element, which was foreign to Catholic universalism but not to Gallicanism, belonged indispensably to Chateaubriand’s politics of feeling and allegiance. A common religion was one way in which a shared allegiance might heal a divided nation. The nation itself was another. Tapping patriotic feeling to unite a country against its internal foes became a theme for the nineteenth-century right, for use first against liberalism and later against international socialism. Nor for Chateaubriand was the pursuit of French pride mere literary exhortation. As foreign minister he promoted, against British reservations, an invasion of Spain to crush its liberals (1823) and pressed for an alliance with Russia to break up the Ottoman Empire, for a French foothold in Latin America, and for a “just expansion” of France’s frontier along the Rhine. Napoleon III eventually tried all of it, with disastrous results for France and Europe. Charles de Gaulle, an admirer of Chateaubriand’s prose, also heard his cry: “I wanted the French to want glory.” De Gaulle, however, understood France’s limits. By his time, national glory was not on offer. The representation of glory had to serve in its place.

Appended to Génie were the wildly popular Romantic novellas, René and Atala, which were written or published earlier. Their antihero, René, is an unhappy young man without a home in society who, unlike Goethe’s Werther, rather than kill himself seeks purpose from life in the American woods. These short works counted heavily toward the success of a long book that Chateaubriand made longer by adding doctrine and theology, as if to appease serious Christian thinkers who expected better defenses of faith’s claims to truth than his “I wept, so I believed.” Chateaubriand’s religion of sentiment had limits, but it lit up a problem facing later conservatives looking to Christianity to provide a civic religion that liberal modernity, they believed, was too thin and too divisive on its own to allow for. Félicité de Lamennais, a cofounder of Le Conservateur, was one of several nineteenth-century conservative religious thinkers—Wilhelm von Ketteler, John Henry Newman, Charles Hodge, and Orestes Brownson—who, as will be seen, also hoped to reconcile faith and modernity.

Maistre, Burke, and Chateaubriand each handed down to conservatism an intellectual target for use by the right against the left. The target could be thought of as a triangle that might be hit on any one of its sides: an apostasy or denial; a wrong way of thinking; and a suspect kind of thinker. First, revolutionaries denied divine providence (Maistre), custom and tradition (Burke), or enchantment (Chateaubriand). Second, they thought about politics in the wrong way, whether by corrosive “raison individuelle” (Maistre), delusory “pure metaphysical abstraction” (Burke), or the deadening “l’esprit positif” (Chateaubriand). Just what those highly general charges were and whether they were one charge or many were left to conservatives to wrestle later in the twentieth century, when efforts were made to give the idea rationalism in politics more philosophical shape and weight. In contrast, the third side of the triangle, the suspect intellectual, gave a clear, palpable target. Revolutionary thinkers, on this last charge, were “men of letters” without recognized status or interests of their own save the practice of moral and political criticism itself. Their aim was not, as they proclaimed, to make a new, better, or reformed society but rather to maintain unending argument about a new, better, or reformed society. For only unending argument gave political men of letters a rationale. The political intellectual, on that unflattering picture, was a half-trained doctor who was quick to spot ailments, real or imagined, but with no grasp of health and no ability to cure.

iii. Order in Nations and Among Nations: Gentz and Other Germans

The right might abjure intellectualism in politics, but it needed brains of its own who could take on the intellectuals of the left. An outstanding early model was Friedrich von Gentz (1764–1832), who spent a career of drafting and arguing in the service of established order, both within and among the nations of Europe. For intellectual combat of that kind, he was well equipped. As a young man, he went to Königsberg with a recommendation from Moses Mendelssohn to study under Immanuel Kant, heard him lecture, corrected the proofs of Kant’s Critique of Judgment, and was returned to his father, in the philosopher’s words, “in good health and well-schooled.” Besides translating the first French critics of the Revolution, in 1793 Gentz put into German Burke’s Reflections, teasing out Burke’s thought in long footnotes that tidied up the argument in rationalist spirit.

Revolution for Gentz was not an assault by reason but an assault on reason. The revolutionary error to his mind was not reasoning about politics in strange ways that were wrong even when done well, but reasoning in familiar ways, only doing it badly. Revolution was not as for Burke an attack on custom by reason but an attack by poor reasoning on good. For Gentz, the primary question of politics was how power was best used for the maintenance of peace and stability, both within and among nations. If that was an “abstract” principle, so be it. If broad maxims drawn from some combination of prudence, reasoning, and experience were “abstract,” so be it. Gentz was not interested in fighting battles against the Enlightenment, nor after his early sallies was he much involved in philosophy.

Gentz’s thought looked back and ahead. It looked back to the sixteenth- and seventeenth-century modern tradition of raison d’état (the idea, present in the writings of Niccolò Machiavelli and Thomas Hobbes, that obligations on states and their trustees were specific to politics and not neatly exportable from the sphere of personal morality). It looked forward to what later became known as realpolitik, or realism (the idea that geopolitics, the first element of statecraft, involved an amoral contest among sovereign nations unregulated by supranational norms or ideals save rudimentary counsels of prudence). For Gentz, reasoning well about politics meant thinking out what raison d’état required in the turbulent status quo of revolutionary and Napoleonic Europe. For later conservative realists, his question generalized. In whatever turbulent status quo they found themselves, they too had to ask, “What here and now does raison d’état require?”

Established as a lawyer and state official in Berlin, Gentz ran the journals New German Monthly (1795) and the Historical Journal (1799). His grasp of foreign affairs and finance won him a reputation. When his hostility to Napoleon left him politically homeless in peace-seeking Prussia, he left for Vienna (1802), where he worked as a writer-adviser for hire to the Austrians and British. French occupation (1805) made him an exile again, but he was back in Vienna by 1810 as an aide to the Austrian chancellor, Metternich. Pleas for a court post went unheard, and he operated as a commoner with only Metternich’s protection. As drafter and frequently creative notetaker, he was at the five post-Napoleonic congresses. Although no democrat, he thought the idea of restoring France’s Bourbons after 1830 by force absurd, and lost the chancellor’s favor.

A rake and gambler ever in debt, Gentz was frowned on by the pious. In his sixties, he fell in love with an eighteen-year-old dancer, the daughter of Joseph Haydn’s copyist, who without claiming to be faithful made him happy in old age. Romantic conservatives took Gentz for an eighteenth-century leftover, democrats and socialists for a reactionary, and Prussian nationalists for a faithless cosmopolitan. He was little read and soon forgotten. He reads today more like a familiar, realist conservative than his backward-looking contemporaries. As a political intellectual serving the chancelleries of Europe, Gentz’s first concern was less with speculating about how power should be exercised than vindicating how it was exercised. He was an early model of a familiar present-day figure, the clever policy intellectual with top degrees circulating between right-wing think tanks, conservative magazines, and political leaders’ private offices.

In thinking about revolution, Gentz was an enthusiast for 1789. He followed Kant in taking the National Assembly for legitimate and not, as Burke claimed, a usurpation of royal authority; however, Gentz soon turned against the Revolution. The revolutionaries’ mistake was not in having universal, innovative ideals, it was in leaving them general, unanchored, and out of practical reach. Gentz did not mock the Declaration of the Rights of Man in the satirical manner of Justus Möser (1720–94), the north-Saxon critic of market society and Enlightenment princely reform. Nor did Gentz fault the declaration, as Burke had done, for misunderstanding the character of rights. Gentz instead subjected the declaration to an article-by-article critique (1793) for errors of drafting and logic in the manner of a philosophically attuned lawyer. The declaration to his mind was not so much misconceived as ill-done.

Gentz wrote not as a philosopher but as a publicist and political adviser. He understood the role of political intellectuals as laying out simple principles and defending the policies of their political masters in depth. Gentz’s essay “On the Balance of Power” (1806) spelled out the guidelines for European peace that served the post-Napoleonic settlements. Within states, locally chosen arrangements, republican or monarchical, should prevail unless they upset continental order. In the German lands—Prussia, Austria, and the other territories of the defunct Holy Roman Empire—politics should promote faith (which fostered obedience) and hold democracy at bay.
A defender of free opinion as an editor in Berlin, Gentz supported its suppression in the press and universities in the climate of reaction after 1815. Public opinion, he wrote, should be formed, not followed. Afraid of Prussian domination, Gentz opposed confederal institutions that might serve to unite Germany as well as Friedrich List’s common market. As for nascent socialism, it was to be stifled at birth. Over dinner at the Congress of Aix (1818), Gentz suavely told the cooperativist Robert Owen: “We do not want the mass to become wealthy and independent of us. How could we govern them if they were?”

Gentz’s tone and style were at their clearest in On the State of Europe before and after the French Revolution (1801), his reply to the case against Britain by Alexandre d’Hauterive, Napoleon’s diplomatic aide. Monarchy had not brought eighteenth-century Europe to darkness and poverty, Gentz argued; rather, reforming monarchs across the continent had raised standards of living. War had broken out in 1792 not because of British belligerence, but because the Westphalian system had broken down under the weight of Prussian growth, Russian pressure, and the general growth of trade. British commercial interests had not prejudiced France; the Navigation Acts hindered Britain more than they did its competitors. Britain had not exploited superior naval power; it had fought at sea through the eighteenth century on equal terms. France and Britain were both colonial powers, neither with a clear advantage. Nor did Britain monopolize industry; its products sold widely in Europe because they were better. They were better because Britain had freed itself from false economic doctrines. Gentz was on retainer from the British and writing what he judged served his masters’ cause. What strikes the present-day reader is a tone familiar from “realist” conservatism: the coolly factual style; the confident dismissal of radical claims, especially claims about the dismal past; and a presumptive framework of competitive national goals.

Gentz had tried at first to engage in the dispute among German philosophers about the nature and desirability of the French Revolution but soon withdrew, aware that his talents lay elsewhere. The leading philosophers in Germany—Immanuel Kant, Friedrich Schiller, J. G. Fichte, and G.W.F. Hegel—were, to begin with, favorable on the whole about the Revolution. They saw in it, each in their way, hope for social progress and a more reasonable politics. Kant thought that although there was no right to rebellion in general, the French Revolution might prove beneficial if people’s enthusiasm turned to civic engagement and support for a constitution. As if to welcome to its cause the author of the anti-tyrannical play The Robbers, the French republic made Schiller an honorary citizen (1792). Schiller greeted 1789 as a step for freedom but wondered if people were ready for it, writing to a friend in 1793, “You have to constitute citizens before you can give them a constitution.” The Terror shocked even progressive German opinion. The change was evident in Hegel’s work, when he looked back in the 1800s. Fichte, who blamed the Terror on the belligerence of France’s neighbors, had at first to fight off claims by German reactionaries that he was a Jacobin. But Fichte himself then turned against the Revolution when France (1806–7) turned against Prussia.

Less well-known thinkers who influenced later German conservatives were against revolution from the outset. August Rehberg (1757–1836) was a German Burkean and scholar from Hanover who took the Revolution to be antihistorical. He mistrusted broad, universal principles and faulted the French Revolution for flying against what was locally achievable at that moment in history. A defender of Germany’s small states and an opponent of centralism, Rehberg was not against change or reform itself but only change in the wrong hands. With that in mind, he called on Germany’s privileged classes to reform themselves. He disapproved of Kant’s rationalistic enthusiasm, as he saw it, for 1789. Rehberg took Kant’s support for the Revolution as a failure to gauge the gap between universal maxims and their practical achievability. For the political romanticism of his friend Adam Müller (1779–1829), Gentz had little patience. However sharp was Müller’s critique of new ways to think of state and society, Gentz took his approach as backward looking. Müller’s hopes for preserving Germany’s legally privileged classes, its old “estates,” and restoring an imagined premodern unity struck Gentz as out of touch. Revolution had to be fought, Gentz insisted, not with nostalgia but with modernity’s own weapons.
Hegel is a telling bookend to German reactions to the French Revolution. Like Kant, the liberal Hegel believed that satisfactory arrangements in politics must be reasonable. They must, that is, be intelligible and acceptable to those who must live under them. Those conditions of acceptability and intelligibility need not, however, be the same for everyone at all times. Reason, on Hegel’s view, ought not to try to apply itself in isolation from the society in which people found themselves. France’s revolutionaries pressed too fast with principles that were too detached from actual circumstances. The Revolution took a wrong turn, left history’s “rational” march for freedom, and slipped into violent unreason. The Terror, on that understanding, was a contingent horror, as little part of an intelligible human history, Hegel wrote, as “chopping the head off a cabbage.” Instead, in Hegel’s superhistory the motor force of history—humanity’s urge for freedom—passed in Napoleon’s hands from France to Germany, where the old, “irrational” patchwork of the German empire was discarded and political freedom found new expression in Prussian constitutionalism.

After his death, Hegel’s heritage divided like the French assembly into right and left. Right Hegelians were on the whole religion-minded conservatives who found in his works a vindication of prevailing arrangements, understood as the achievement of world history’s march toward freedom in Prussian constitutionalism. The left Hegelians took from Hegel a tool for the criticism of prevailing arrangements, understood as only the latest stage in an unfinished struggle for recognition by the weak against the strong. In its Marxist variant, left Hegelianism turned world history into a tradition of revolution.

Hegel himself paid little attention to the recent revolution in America. In the early 1820s, the oversight made sense. In his Philosophy of History (1822), Hegel took the new country as too fluid and open in its likely futures to say anything world-historical about it. Such philosophical caution had been no constraint on Gentz, the policy intellectual, when thinking of contemporary upheaval and war experienced by peoples across the Atlantic world. Two decades earlier, he had written a spirited essay contrasting the French and American Revolutions, which was published in his Historical Journal. Its characteristic brio caught the eye of the American envoy in Berlin, the young John Quincy Adams, later president and a leading conservative Whig. Adams translated the essay and had it published soon after in the United States (1800). He was glad to welcome an article from “one of the most distinguished political writers in Germany.” For Adams, it rescued the American Revolution “from the disgraceful imputation of having proceeded from the same principles as that of France.”

iv. Revolution to Prevent Revolution:
  Madison and Other Americans

The left charged supporters of 1776 who opposed 1789 with inconsistency. The charge was commonplace across the Atlantic world and needed answering by the right. In Europe, it was heard against Burke. In the United States, it was popular among Jeffersonian anti-Federalists. Gentz’s answer to the charge was scholastic and lawyerly. As he described them, the American Revolution was defensive; the French, offensive. The Americans were defending established rights that had been injured or abridged by the British. Their aims were fixed and limited. Revolution prompted little resistance from within the colonies; widespread support for independence created a nation. The French Revolution stood in contrast on each point. The revolutionaries usurped power and trampled on rights. They had no aim but set off “in a thousand various directions, continually crossing each other.” Far from creating a unified nation, they provoked a mass of resistance and plunged the country into civil war. The good American and the bad French Revolutions became part of conservatism’s intellectual armory.

In fact, there was not just one American response to the French Revolution but varied, shifting responses. The Americans in Paris—Thomas Jefferson and Gouverneur Morris—offer a telling contrast. Jefferson was the American envoy in Paris (1785–89), sent there the year before to join Benjamin Franklin and John Adams in negotiating commercial and diplomatic treaties with the major powers. When it came, France’s revolution excited him. He believed in “the good sense of man” and his “capacity for self-government.” If reason could exert its force, Jefferson was confident he was seeing the “first chapter of European liberty” (August 1789). He did not feel tied to past, believing with Thomas Paine that “the earth belongs in usufruct to the living.”

Jefferson took events in France and America as expressions of popular resistance. Two years earlier, rioting by armed country debtors in Massachusetts who stormed a tax house had scared the wealthy and powerful of the new land, but not Jefferson. “I like a little rebellion now and then. It is like a storm in the atmosphere,” he wrote in a letter brushing off the affair (February 1787). Jefferson looked on government as dangerous to people’s liberty. Rulers needed warning from time to time that people “preserve the spirit of resistance,” he wrote of popular unrest in general later that same year. The answer was not violence but conciliation. “Let them take arms. The remedy is to set them right as to facts, pardon & pacify them. What signify a few lives lost in a century or two? The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots & tyrants. It is its natural manure” (November 1787).

In May 1789, Jefferson, now envoy for the United States, eagerly attended the Estates General. To James Madison back home he wrote of what he took for a French sense of common enterprise: “Our proceedings have been viewed as a model for them on every occasion.” The American constitution was treated “like . . . the bible, open to explanation but not to question.” With the Marquis de Lafayette, Jefferson began to sketch out a declaration of rights for France.

Jefferson’s successor as American envoy when he returned to America in autumn 1789 was a constitutional monarchist, the wealthy New Yorker Gouverneur Morris (1752–1816). A frequent speaker at the Constitutional Convention (1787), he had chaired the Committee on Style, which wrote the final draft and added the phrase with its fateful pronoun which opens the Preamble, “We, the people of the United States.” A strong federalist, he was antislavery but exclusive in his understanding of democracy. Morris believed, like the conservative Whigs to come, that substantial property was a requirement for political participation. Morris was an exemplar of what Jefferson later called the “Anglo-Monarchio-Aristocratic” Federalists—the bankers for commerce and

(continued...)
NAME INDEX

Abraham, J. H., 214
Abrams, Elliott, 322
Acton, Lord, 212–13; on Stahl, 118
Adams, Henry, 206, 447; background of, 98; Democracy, 159, 235–36; disillusioned view of the people of, 224, 235–36; works of, 483
Adams, John, 31, 446
Adams, John Quincy, 31, 96–98, 112, 428
Adelson, Sheldon, 343
Adenauer, Konrad, 286–88, 334, 338, 428
Adorno, Theodor, 52, 53
Agnew, Spiro, 370
Allitt, Patrick, 251
Ames, Fisher, 317
Apollinaire, 159
Aquinas, Thomas, 383
Aristotle, 423, 424
Arnold, Matthew, 140, 210
Aron, Robert, 249
Attlee, Clement, 298
Austin, John, 120
Babbitt, Irving, 252, 254
Bachelard, Gaston, 401
Bacon, Francis, 8
Bagelhot, Walter, 3, 55
Baldwin, Stanley, 18, 201, 428–29; background and career of, 180–82; bibliography for, 480; postwar reputation of, 183–84; social-unity Toryism of, 298
Balfour, Arthur, 178
Bancroft, George, 228
Bannon, Steve, 371–72, 447; bibliography for, 492
Barnes, Thomas, 83
Barrès, Maurice, 447
Barthes, Roland, 327
Bartley, Robert, 320
Baudelaire, Charles, 52, 352
Beard, Charles, 102
Bell, Daniel, 320, 359–60
Belloc, Hilaire, 252
Bellow, Saul, 314
Benedict of Nursia, 372
Benoist, Alain de, 367, 376, 379–82, 448; bibliography for, 493
Bentham, Jeremy, 141, 146
Berlioz, Hector, 71
Bethmann-Hollweg, Theo von, 429
Bibesco, Marthe, 229
Bidault, Georges, 429
Bismarck, Otto von, 79–80, 168, 334; antisocialist laws of, 64, 190; conservatives’ division over, 90–91, 93; fall and resignation of, 187; as Iron Chancellor, 187–88; pursuit of German unification by, 188; successes and failures of, 95–96; supporting free trade, 189–90
Blum, Léon, 262
Bock-Côté, Mathieu, 378–79
Bodin, Jean, 425
Bohrer, Karl-Heinz, 248
Bolingbroke, Viscount (Henry St. John), 13, 81–82 Bonald, Louis de, 21, 51
Borges, Jorge Luis, 247
Bourdieu, Pierre, 377
Boutin, Christine, 379
Boutwood, Arthur, 182
Bradford, Mel, 448
Bradley, F. H., 448; anti-individualism of, 110, 144–45; bibliography for, 479; ethical and social thoughts of, 151–56, 254; Ethical Studies, 152–53; on morality’s claims, 144–45
Brandner, Stephan, 346
Brecht, Bertolt, 247
Brennan, Jason, 413–14, 448
Broad, C. D., 215, 406–7
Broglie, Victor de, 78
Brooks, David, 341, 409–10
Brownson, Orestes, 24, 110, 448–49; bibliography for, 478; criticism of political liberalism by, 134–35; defense of Catholicism by, 124, 125, 133–34, 136; on need for universal morality, 136
Bruckner, Pascal, 376
Bryan, William Jennings, 197, 198
Bucard, Marcel, 434–35
Buchanan, Patrick, 449; bibliography for, 369–70, 492; as disruptive conservative, 366–67; ear for public mood, 368; paleoconservatism of, 367–71; presidential runs of, 369
Buckley, William Jr., 323, 449; bibliography for, 489; as influential conservative thinker, 297, 317–20; support of segregation by, 319
Bülau, Friedrich, 224
Bülow, Bernhard von, 429
Buret, Eugène, 224
Burnham, James, 317–18, 319, 449–50; bibliography for, 489
Bush, George W., 336; paleoconservatives and, 368, 369
Butler, R. A., 278
Byron, Lord, 64
Caillaux, Joseph, 169
Calhoun, John, 123, 252, 450; bibliography for, 476; as defender of South, 65, 108–9, 111–17; Discourse on the Constitution, 112, 114–15; Disquisition on Government, 112–14; on Founders, 114–15; opposing tariffs, 446; political career of, 112; as supporter of slavery, 106, 115–16; suspicion of majoritarian power of, 112–17
Cameron, David, 348–49
Cameron, Simon, 236
Camus, Albert, 21
Canning, George, 429–30
Cannon, Joseph, 199, 430
Carlyle, Thomas, 19, 138, 228, 419, 450
Carnegie, Andrew, 195–96
Carter, Jimmy, 316
Carter, Rosalynn, 306
Castlereagh, Viscount, 60
Cecil, Hugh, Conservatism, 182
Chamberlain, Joseph, 46, 177, 207, 269
Chambord, Comte de (Henri d’Artois), 430
Channing, William Ellery, 135
Charles I, 64, 76
Chateaubriand, François-René de, 60, 64, 450; background of, 20; bibliography for, 473; French pride of, 23–24; Le Génie du Chrétianisme, 20, 22–24; on liberal modernity, 20–21; Mémoires d’outre-tombe, 20; religion of sentiment of, 22–24; Romantic side of, 21–22
Chesteron, G. K., 252
Chirac, Jacques, 276
Choate, Rufus, 3, 100, 317, 450–51
Churchill, Winston, 178, 270, 430; Baldwin and, 183–84; bibliography for, 480; personality of, 184; post-WW II, 277–78; as right-wing liberal, 185
Cicero, 424–25
Clarke, Arthur C., 267
Clausewitz, Carl von, 380
Clay, Henry, 103–5, 142, 430, 446
Clemenceau, Georges, 169, 170
Clermont-Tonnerre, Stanislas de, 375
Cleveland, Grover, 197
Clinton, Bill, 338
Clinton, Hilary, 344
Cobett, William, 138, 421, 451
Cocteau, Jean, 377
Cohn-Bendit, Daniel, 268
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, 243, 254, 451; on aim of state, 139; bibliography for, 478–79; clerisy of, 110, 118, 139–42; conservatism of, 141–42; on liberal progress, 52, 53; on moral improvement, 201–2; On the Constitution of Church and State, 138–40; turn of to past, 138–39
Collingwood, R. G., 296–97, 311, 451; The New Leviathan, 451
Combes, Émile, 168
Condorcet, Marquis de, 35
Conkling, Roscoe, 196
Conrad, Joseph, 451
Constant, Benjamin, 71, 73
Coolidge, Calvin, 202–3, 430–31
Coty, François, 171, 275, 431
Coughlin, Charles, 431
Coulanges, Numa Fustel de, 228
Crane, Jasper, 203
Cummings, Dominic, 342
Derby, Lord. See Stanley, Edward (Lord Derby)
Déroulède, Paul, 166–67, 434
Dicey, A. V., 144
Dickinson, Emily, 71
Diogenes, 400
Disraeli, Benjamin, 18, 82, 452; bibliography for, 475; Crystal Palace Speech of, 87; as epitome of British right, 87–88; on liberal modernity, 85–87; in modern British conservatism, 88; on Peel, 84; popular fiction of, 86; social-unity Toryism of, 56–57, 298; on Tories vs Whigs, 86–87
Doriot, Jacques, 171, 250, 432
Dostoievsky, Fyodor, 306
Douglas, Stephen, 103, 446
Douthat, Ross, 341
Dreher, Rod, 371–73, 452, 492; The Benedict Option, 372–73
Drieu la Rochelle, Pierre, 452, 484; as fascist sympathizer, 243; Gilles, 250, 452; in interwar hard right, 249–50; Socialisme Fasciste, 250
Drumont, Édouard, 167, 434
Du Camp, Maxime, 452, 483; Convulsions de Paris, 233, 453; on Paris Commune, 224, 233–35; scorn for common people of, 206, 233–35
Duhamel, Georges, 249
Duterte, Rodrigo, 348
dward VIII, abdication of, 180
Eisenhower, Dwight, 54, 270, 288–91, 432; farewell address of, 291
 Eliot, George, 159
 Eliot, T. S., 140–41, 453; Babbitt and, 254; bibliography for, 485; critique of liberal modernism of, 206, 243; on cultural traditions, 252–54
Emerson, Ralph Waldo, 97–98
Engels, Friedrich, 224
Erhard, Ludwig, 287
Eulenburg, Philipp zu, 432
Evnine, Simon, 59
Fassbinder, Rainer Werner, 268
Feiling, Keith, Torvism, 179 Ferry, Jules, 168, 230
Feuerbach, Ludwig, 123
Fichte, J. G., 28–29
Field, Stephen J., 200, 432
Fillmore, Millard, 104
Fillon, François, 344
Finck, August von, 343
Finkielkraut, Alain, 367, 376–79, 453, 493
Finney, Charles, 135
Finnis, John, 366, 383–87, 404–5, 453, 493
Fiske, John, 228
Flandin, Pierre, 432–33
Flaubert, Gustave, 159
Fontane, Theodor, 96
Fouché, Joseph, 21
Fouillée, Alfred, 231–32
Fox, Charles James, 12
Franco, Francisco, 304
Franklin, Benjamin, 31
Franz Joseph, 91
Freeden, Michael, 56
Freeman, Edward, History of the Norman Conquest, 228
Freud, Sigmund, 231
Friedrich Wilhelm IV, 94
Gable, Francis, 323
Galbraith, John Kenneth, 318
Gambetta, Léon, 165
Gascoyne-Cecil, Robert. See Salisbury, Lord (Robert Gascoyne-Cecil) Gasset, José Ortega y, 232
Gauchet, Marcel, 377
Gauland, Alexander, 346
Gehlen, Arnold, 308, 317, 321, 391, 423, 453–54; on authoritative power, 51; bibliography for, 487–88; conservatism of, 301–4; philosophical anthropology of, 296
George, Henry, 207
George, Robert, 388
George I, 81, 445
George III, 81, 445
Gerlach, Leopold and Ludwig, 94, 433
Gide, André, 247
Gierke, Otto von, 110, 454; bibliography for, 479; History of the Law of Fellowship, 150–51; on law and the state, 144–45; opposition of to modern state, 148–51
Gilmour, Ian, 454
Gilmour, Wet Ian, 300
Gingrich, Newt, 338, 433
Girvin, Brian, 45
Giscard d’Estaing, Valéry, 56, 274, 276, 277, 433
Gladstone, William: on Burke, 3; on Disraeli, 87
Gobineau, Joseph Arthur de, 380
Goldwater, Barry, 292–93, 434
Gorbachev, Mikhail, 425; Thatcher and, 332
Gorsuch, Neil, 388
Gottfried Paul, 364–65
Gramsci, Antonio, 380
Greeley, Horace, 99
Green, E. H. H., 185
Greiffenhagen, Martin, 365–66
Grotius, Hugo, 149
Guizot, François, 76–77, 357
Habermas, Jürgen, 303, 404
Halifax, Lord, 184
Haller, Karl Ludwig von, 121, 454–55
Hallowell, John, 316
Hanna, Mark, 198, 434
Harding, Warren G., 202
Harnwell, Benjamin, 372
Harscher, Ludwig, 60
Hartz, Louis, 102, 218
Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 51–52, 136, 455
Hayek, Friedrich, 397; American right wing and, 203; on capitalism and wisdom of markets, 296, 322, 390; on National Review, 318; right-wing liberalism of, 46
Hayes, Rutherford, 105
Hazlitt, William, 71; on Burke, 13; on Coleridge, 140
Heath, Edward, 280–81, 435
Hegel, G. W. F., 28–29, 30, 151, 396, 425–26; collectivists and, 149; Oakeshott and, 461; on philosophy of history, 30, 311; reactions to French Revolution and, 30; reconciliationism of, 123; socially articulated state view of, 130; Stahl on, 118; on state powers, 226–27; view of socially articulated state, 130
Heidegger, Martin, 52, 53; Being and Time, 400–401, 455; Schmitt and, 256
Heine, Heinrich, 88–89, 96, 226
Helfferich, Karl, 435
Helldorff, Otto von, 190–91, 435
Helldorff-Bedra, Otto von, 95
Helms, Jesse, 294, 435–36
Henriot, Philippe, 435
Heydebrand, Ernst von, 436
Hirschman, Albert O., 52–53, 218
Hitler, Adolf, 181, 183, 247, 256; rise of, 186
Hobbes, Thomas, 48, 63, 425; Oakeshott and, 461
Hobhouse, Leonard, 46; Liberalism, 182
Höcke, Björn, 346, 350; Kurzitscheck and, 375
Hodge, Charles, 24, 455; bibliography for, 478; Calvinism of, 135–36; strict Presbyterianism of, 110, 125, 137
Hoffer, Eric, The True Believer, 232
Hofstadter, Richard, 36, 116
Hogg, Quintin (Lord Hailsham), 421, 455–56
Hollande, François, 43
Holmes, Stephen, 387
Hooker, Richard, 63, 132, 425
Hugenberg, Alfred, 193–94, 436
Huguenin, François, 60, 364–65
Humboldt, Wilhelm von, 46
Hume, David, 9, 81, 396; conservative cheerfulness of, 62; on authority, 48–49; habits of thought, 128
Huntington, Samuel, 56, 59
Huxley, Aldous, 210
Hyndman, Henry, 207
Icahn, Carl, 343
Jackson, Andrew, 71, 112
James, Henry, 159
James II, 445
Jefferson, Thomas, 31–32, 33
Johnson, Andrew, 105
Johnson, Boris, 341–42, 349, 356, 436
Johnson, Woody, 343
Jongen, Marc, 364, 375–76, 404
Joseph, Keith, 281–82, 436; Reversing the Trend, 281
Jouvenel, Bertrand de, 311, 456
Jowett, Benjamin, 210
Jünger, Ernst, 456; background and career of, 246–49; bibliography for, 484; on conservative revolution, 243, 244, 247, 381; and escape into action, 206; and redemption through disengagement, 246–47; Schmitt and, 255–56; unconservative prose of, 247–48
Kant, Immanuel, 28–29, 149, 151, 426
Kardorff, Wilhelm, 190, 437
Kavanaugh, Brett, 388
Kebede, T. E., A History of Toryism, 4
Kekes, John, 407–8
Kendall, Willmoore, 317–18, 319, 456–57, 490
Ketteler, Wilhelm von, Bishop of Mainz, 24, 136, 456; background of, 129; bibliography for, 477; on liberalism, 124; social Catholicism of, 110, 128–31
Keynes, John Maynard, 216, 242
Khrushchev, Nikita, 290
Kierkegaard, Søren, 52, 132
Kipling, Rudyard, 180
Kirk, Russell, 324, 369, 457; The Conservative Mind, 18; neoconservatives and, 322; six-part conservatism of, 316
Kissinger, Henry, 318
Kleist-Retzow, Hans Hugo von, 89, 95, 437
Klemperer, Victor, 238, 308
Kohl, Helmut, 288, 332–34, 338, 437
Kolnai, Aurel, 296, 311, 457
Kristol, Irving, 297, 320, 324, 322, 457
Kubitschek, Götz, 366–67, 374–75
La Rocque, François de, 434
Lafayette, Marquis de, 32
Lamennais, Félicité de, 457–58; bibliography for, 477; On Indifference, 128; reconciling faith and modernity, 24, 110, 125, 126–28
Lange, Oskar, 217
Laniel, Joseph, 437
Laval, Pierre, 174, 267, 437–38
Lavisse, Ernest, 228 Law, Andrew Bonar, 438
Law, Bonar, 59–60, 180
Le Bon, Gustave, 240, 458; bibliography for, 482–83; The Crowd, 230–31; on irrationality of crowds, 206, 224, 229–33
Le Pen, Jean-Marie, 277, 343, 344, 346, 438
Le Pen, Marine, 340, 346–47, 379, 438
Le Play, Frédéric, 142, 224, 240
Lee, Tim Berners, 327
Leo, Leonard, 388
Leo XIII, Pope, 53, 130
Leopoldi, Giacomo, 51
Levet, Bérénice, 378–79
Levin, Yuval, The Fractured Republic, 408–9
Lincoln, Abraham, 105, 116
Lindberg, Daniel, 377
Lippman, Walter, 238
Lloyd George, David, 179–80, 182
Locke, John, 138, 149, 427; Maistre on, 8; as popular sovereignty defender, 318
Lodge, Henry Cabot, 429
Long, Huey, 353
Louis Napoleon, 77–78, 160
Louis-Philippe, 76, 89, 440
Louis XVIII, 21, 75–76
Ludovici, Antony, A Defence of Conservatism, 182
Luhmann, Niklas, 62, 423
Lukes, Steven, 61
Lyautey, Hubert, 434
MacIntyre, Alasdair, 51, 306, 458; After Virtue, 297, 312, 314; bibliography for, 489; closet liberalism of, 313; critique of liberal-modernism of, 312–15; Dreyfus and, 372–73; values conservatism and, 307
MacMahon, General, 79, 80, 164, 445
Macmillan, Harold, 56, 182, 278, 438; The Middle Way, 182, 280, 438; political career of, 280; Skelton and, 464
Macron, Emmanuel, 43, 344
Madison, James, 198–99, 458; bibliography for, 474; on democracy, 34–36; in framing of American government, 32–36; on popular sovereignty, 357; on tyranny of majorities, 35, 114
Maistre, Joseph de, 458–59; anti-liberal modernism of, 352; anti-rationalism of, 6–7; antirevolutionary arguments of, 24; background of, 3–4; bibliography for, 472; compared to Burke, 5–18; as exile, 7–8; on French Revolution and Revolutionary Terror, 5, 9; moral conservatism and, 148; Petersburg Dialogues, 8, 458; on political and social obligations, 9–10; on religion and social order, 5–6; rhetorical power of, 4; Stahl and, 120
Maistre, Xavier de, 8
Maitland, Frederick, 150
Major, John, 338
Malcolm, Noel, 410–13
Mallock, William, 206, 459; antisocialist books of, 208; Aristocracy and Evolution, 208; bibliography for, 481; defending capitalism, 207–11; Labour and the Popular Welfare, 209; Social Equality, 208

Mann, Thomas, 360

Mannheim, Karl, 56

Mansfield, Harvey, 362

Manteuffel, Otto von, 95, 439

Mao Tse-Tung, 380

Marcuse, Herbert, 376

Maréchal Le Pen, Marion, 347–48, 355, 372

Marin, Louis, 439

Maritain, Jacques, 411, 459

Marquard, Odo, 308, 459

Marshall, Alfred, 209

Martineau, Harriet, 111

Marx, Karl, 57, 76, 79, 216, 375–76; Sorel and, 241

Mason, George, 35

Maurras, Charles, 460; Action Française of, 169, 260; anti-liberalism of, 206, 260–61; authoritarianism of, 7, 255; bibliography for, 485–86; on Chateaubriand, 21; on legal vs. real nation, 353; prejudices of, 261–63; three elements in outlook of, 260

May, Theresa, 349, 356

McCarthy, Joseph, 290, 359

McClosky, Herbert, 62

McKinley, William, 198, 434

Mead, Walter Russell, 100–101, 357–58

Mélenchon, Jean-Luc, 344

Méline, Jules, 169, 439

Mencken, H. L., 159, 254, 460; The American Language, 238; anti-liberal modernism of, 352; bibliography for, 483; prejudices of, 236–38; scorn for middle class of, 206, 224, 236–39

Merkel, Angela, 334, 346, 439

Metternich, Klemens von, 26, 59, 421, 454

Michel, Louise, 71

Michels, Roberto, 208

Mill, John Stuart, 46, 110, 303, 313, 384, 405; on attachment to nation, 227; on Calhoun, 111; on Coleridge, 144; On Liberty, 147; On Representative Government, 223; suspicion of majoritarian power of, 117

Mises, Ludwig, 203

Mitterrand, Francois, 43, 277, 336–38, 381

Moeller van den Bruck, Arthur, 247, 460; background of, 245–46; bibliography for, 483; conservative revolution of, 243, 244; on liberalism as death of nations, 353; on national values, 206; negativism of, 246; The Third Reich, 245–46

Mohler, Armin, 305; conservative revolution of, 243–44

MommSEN, Theodore, 225

Moore, Thomas, 13

More, Elmer, 252

Morgan, J. P., 195

Morny, Charles de, 78

Morris, Gouverneur, 31, 32–33, 460

Moser, Johanne Jakob, 425, 471

Mosley, Oswald, 327, 439–40

Mounier, Emmanuel, 411, 459

Moynihan, Patrick, 320

Mudde, Cas, 341

Müller, Adam, 22, 138–39, 460–61; anti-rationalism of, 29, 50–51; works of, 471

Muller, Jerry Z., 64

Mun, Albert de, 440

Mussolini, Benito, 242, 431, 435

Napoleon III, 78–79

NewhaU, John, 386

Newman, John Henry (Cardinal), 24, 124, 125, 461; anti-rationalism of, 126; bibliography for, 478; Christian task of, 131–33; on four ways to govern, 133; The Grammar of Assent, 133; politics of, 133; on Roman church as countermodern authority, 110; Tracts for the Times, 132
Nickisch, Ernst, 247
Niemeyer, Gerhart, 316, 319
Nietzsche, Friedrich, 52, 63, 89, 238; anti-liberal modernism of, 352; on human as “incomplete animal,” 301; moral skepticism of, 146, 239
Nixon, Richard, 292–94, 370, 440; hard-right themes used by, 352; landslide win of, 359
Nora, Pierre, 377
Norton, Charles Eliot, 254
Nozick, Robert, 461
Oakeshott, Michael, 311, 390, 461; conservatism and liberalism of, 46, 247; and Jünger, 247; political anti-rationalism of, 296, 391, 396, 397; political quietism of, 247
O’Casey, Sean, 159
Oldenburg-Januschau, Elard von, 89, 440
Orwell, George, 21, 238, 308
Paeschke, Hans, 305
Panhurst, Emmeline, 207
Pareto, Vilfredo, 208
Peel, Robert, 278, 440–41; bibliography for, 474–75; in modern British conservatism, 82–84, 88; right-wing liberalism of, 82
Perle, Richard, 322
Pétain, Marshal, 174, 263, 267
Phillips-Fein, Kim, 203
Pierce, Franklin, 104
Pinay, Antoine, 56, 272–73, 441
Pissarro, Camille, 71
Plato, 48
Pobedonostsev, Konstantin, 306
Podhoretz, Norman, 320, 321
Poincaré, Raymond, 170–71, 441
Pompidou, Georges, 276, 441
Popper, Karl, 46, 295, 380, 425–26
Poujade, Pierre, 272, 277, 442
Powell, Enoch, 303, 332, 462; bibliography for, 487; free-marketism of, 280; as herald of hard right, 278, 282, 296, 297–98, 352–53; political career of, 299–300; on society-government estrangement, 298–99; support of Thatcherism, 297–98, 367
Putin, Vladimir, 348
Quinton, Anthony, 47, 182, 406, 408
Radowitz, Joseph von, 94–95, 442
Rand, Ayn, 462
Randolph, John, 317
Ranke, Leopold von, 422
Ransom, John Crowe, 251–52
Ratcliffe, Senator, 235–36
Rawls, John, 46, 425–26
Read, Leonard, 203
Reagan, Ronald, 294, 436, 442; Buckley and, 320; landslide win of, 327, 359; paleoconservatives and, 368, 369; as unifier of the American right, 335–36
Redwood, John, 338, 441
Rehberg, August, 29, 53–54, 138–39, 472
Rehnquist, William, 442
Rémuat, Charles de, 78
Reynaud, Paul, 442–43
Riehl, Wilhelm, 421, 462
Rochau, Karl, 226
Rochefort, Henri, 443
Rockefeller, John D., 195
Rockefeller, Nelson, 292–93
Rockingham, Marquess of, 11, 445
Roosevelt, Franklin, 289
Roosevelt, Theodore, 196, 228; The Winning of the West, 228
Rosanvallon, Pierre, 367, 382
Rossiter, Clinton, 62, 162
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques, 37, 75, 316, 424; Social Contract, 113–14
Ruskin, John, 210, 246
Salazar, António de Oliveira, 304
Salisbury, Lord (Robert Gascoyne-Cecil), 54, 71, 433; background of, 175; bibliography for, 480; as Conservative pragmatist, 82; Home Rule and, 177; as party leader... and prime minister, 176–78; as pathologist of states, 176; political ability of, 177–78
Sarkozy, Nicolas, 346, 379
Sarrazin, Thilo, 349
Sartre, Jean-Paul, 327, 396
Schelling, Friedrich, 123, 311
Schiller, Friedrich, 28–29
Schlafly, Phyllis, 462
Schlegel, Friedrich, 422
Schleicher, Kurt, 256
Schliefermacher, Friedrich, 131, 132, 135
Schmidt, Helmut, 327, 334
Schmitt, Carl, 302, 462–63; anti-liberal modernism of, 206, 255–59; anti-nationalism of, 7; bibliography for, 485; The Concept of the Political, 256–58; Constitutional Theory, 462–63; decisionism of, 242; friend-enemy distinction of, 255–56, 258–59; Legality and Legitimacy, 256
Schmoller, Gustav, 224, 226
Schopenhauer, Arthur, 52, 398
Schrenck-Notzing, Caspar von, 305, 334
Schumpeter, Joseph, 417, 463; bibliography for, 482; Capitalism, Socialism and Democracy, 215–18; on capitalist order, 317; defending capitalism, 57, 215–21; on Le Bon, 231; on need for elites, 206
Scruton, Roger, 365, 425–26, 463; anti-liberalism of, 366, 367, 383, 388–98; on art and beauty, 394–95; background of, 388–89; bibliography for, 493–94; changing attitudes to free-market rationalism of, 397; conservatism of, 389–90; cultural conservatism of, 405; on establishment as aim of politics, 420; exaggerations of, 397; Fools, Firebrands and Scoundrels, 397; on human anchorage and national unity, 395–96; on institutions needed for social order, 390–91; on liberalism’s mistaken ideas, 51, 392–94; The Meaning of Conservatism, 389–90; on moral reliability of local custom, 396–97; On Human Nature, 392; on reason, 391–92; Sartre and, 396; Sloterdijk and, 399
Seeley, J. R., 178; The Expansion of England, 228
Sénéancour, Etienne, 22
Shaw, George Bernard, 207
Shirky, Clay, 341
Sidgwick, Henry, The Elements of Politics, 156
Sieferle, Rolf Peter, 374–75
Sighele, Scipio, 232
Skelton, Noel, 463–64
Sloterdijk, Peter, 398–405, 423, 464; anti-liberalism of, 366; background and personality of, 383, 398–99; belief of in progress, 402–3; bibliography for, 494–95; Bubbles, 401; Critique of Cynical Reason, 398, 399–400; Foams, 402; Globes, 401–2; on “human immune systems,” 402; Rage and Time, 403–4; You Must Change Your Life, 404
Smith, Joseph, Book of Mormon, 71
Smith, Sydney, 132
Sobran, Joseph, 369
Solzhenitsyn, Alexander, 305–6
Sorel, Georges, 239–42, 464; anti-liberalism of, 224, 239–40; anti-nationalism of, 7, 206, 240; bibliography for, 483; on violence, 240–42
Southey, Robert, 138
Spencer, Herbert, 196
Spengler, Oswald, 159, 311; bibliography for, 483; conservative revolution of, 243; Decline of the West, 244; Prussianness and Socialism, 245; Western decline theme of, 244–45, 306, 307, 350
Spinoza, Baruch, 63
Stahl, Ernst Knut, 343
Stahl, Friedrich, 108–9, 464; bibliography for, 477; drafting Prussian Constitution, 121; on moral order, 117–18, 122–23; Philosophy of Law, 118; political career of, 118–19; rational conservatism of, 123–24; on revolution, 119–20; on rule of law, 120–21
Stanley, Edward (Lord Derby), 443; bibliography for, 475; Disraeli and, 82; in modern British conservatism, 88; political career of, 84–85

Stein, Dieter, 375

Steinfels, Peter, The Neoconservatives, 323–24

Stendhal, 71

Stephen, James Fitzjames, 384, 464–65; anti-individualism of, 144–45; anti-liberalism of, 110; background and career of, 145–48; bibliography for, 479; Finnis and, 386; Liberty Equality, Fraternity, 146–47, 464; on Mill, 147

Stern, Fritz, 246

Stoecker, Adolf, 190–91, 443

Strauss, Franz-Josef, 286–87, 288, 327, 443

Stresemann, Gustav, 55–56, 191, 193

Sumner, William Graham, 206, 465; bibliography for, 481; defending capitalism, 211–15; “forgotten man” of, 214–15

Süsterhenn, Adolf, 283

Taft, Robert A., 288–90, 443–44

Taft, William Howard, 199

Taguieff, Pierre-André, 329, 492

Taine, Hippolyte, 10, 52

Talleyrand, Charles-Maurice de, 21

Tarde, Gabriel, 232, 240

Tardieu, André, 172–73, 444

Tate, Allen, 252

Taylor, Zachary, 104

Thatcher, Margaret, 282, 327, 406, 420, 425, 444; economic legacy of, 311; monopolizing of power by, 330–31; on problem with Conservative Party, 329–30; rise to power of, 330; Scruton and, 397; sense of English nation of, 331–32; weakened power of, 332

Thiel, Peter, 343

Thiers, Adolphe, 59, 444–45; career of, 77–79; warning to French conservatives by, 160–61

Tocqueville, Aléxis de, 46, 78, 142, 310–11

Toynbee, Arnold, 311

Treitschke, Heinrich von, 465; bibliography for, 482; on the people’s national character, 206, 224; realpolitik and exclusionist approach of, 225–27; right-wing nationalism of, 191

Trilling, Lionel, The Liberal Imagination, 295

Truman, Harry, 267, 280, 289

Trump, Donald, 336, 341, 388, 445; appeal of to right-wing base, 370; billionaire contributors of, 343; diversionary theatrics of, 348; electoral college victory of, 359; hard-right supporters of, 343–44; “Make America Great Again” theme of, 349, 350; older supporters of, 344

Turgot, Jacques, 35

Tyler, John, 104

Urban, George, 329

Vanderbilt, Cornelius, 195

Viereck, Peter, 465

Vierhaus, Rudolf, 50

Villermé, Louis-René, 224

Voegelin, Eric, 465–66; anti-liberalism of, 306–7, 309–10; bibliography for, 488; on gnosticism, 310–11; historical approach of to political discourse, 309–12; Order and History, 309–10; values conservatism of, 307

Volcker, Paul, 336

Wagener, Hermann, 94, 446; Political and Social Lexicon, 446

Walker Howe, Daniel, 99, 103

Wallace, George, 292, 352

Walpole, Horace, 406

Warren, Earl, 290

Warren, Robert Penn, 252

Weaver, Richard, 466; anti-liberal modernism of, 297, 306, 307–9; bibliography for, 488; Ethics of Rhetoric, 308–9; Ideas Have Consequences, 307–8; Kirk and, 316

Webb, Beatrice and Sidney, 207

Weber, Max, 129
Webster, Daniel, 103, 104, 446; on Calhoun, 116
Weidel, Alice, 345–46, 446
Wellington, Duke of, 60
Welliver, Judson, 202
Wells, H. G., 207
Westarp, Kuno von, 192, 193, 446
Wilberforce, William, 155
Wilhelm, Friedrich, 442
Will, George, 320, 341; on Buckley, 323
Willetts, David, 362, 414, 441–42
Williams, Bernard, 258

Wills, Garry, 323, Confessions of a Conservative, 362
Wilson, Woodrow, 196, 197, 198–99
Wolfowitz, Paul, 322
Wood, Edward (Lord Irwin, Earl of Halifax), 184, 447
Wordsworth, William, 22, 138
Xi, Jinping, 348
Zemmour, Eric, 349
Ziblatt, Daniel, 45–46
Where the sense of a term as used in this book is explained in "Conservative Keywords" (Appendix A), the entry here is in italics. Where listed without comment or attribution, ideas indexed here are to be taken de dicto as they occur in conservative thoughts and arguments dealt with in the book.

Abendland, 304
abolitionists, 33, 65, 84, 117 abortion, stable public opinion on, 387 abstraction, in Burke’s sense, 14–16, 24 Action Française, 260, 262–63 affirmative action, 293; neoconservatives and, 321 Afghanistan, Soviets in, 327 agrarian society, vs. industrialism, 251–52
Ahlen Program, 284
All-German Bloc, 284 allegiances: ethical and cultural, 395, 405; to nation, 343; minority and majority, 378; in social order, 343, 378, 382, 390–93, 395, 405
Alliance Démocratique, 432, 442–43
Alternative for Germany (AfD), 446; decline and capture themes of, 350; financing of, 343; rise of, 345–46; supporters of, 344; as a voice of bourgeois middle class, 375–76
America. See United States
America First Committee of 1939, 353
America Firstism, 289, 340; historic roots of, 353
American Conservative, 449
American Liberty League, 203
American manners, need for reform of, 99–100
American Mercury, 460
American providentialism, 202
American Revolution, 31–36; contrasted with French Revolution, 30–31 Americanism: as civilizational disease, 249; faith-based, 133, 135 anarchy, 9, 11; liberalism viewed as, 261 anger: of French dissidents, 171–72, 234; in hard right’s rise, 342–43; of unreconciled right, 354. See also rage anti-Catholicism, 94, 104, 128, 130, 134, 228 anticommunism, 251, 432, 450; economic liberalism and, 315–16; in U.S., 315 antidiscrimination rules, 314 anti-Europeanism: British, 60, 185, 348–49, 444; French, 347, 438 anti-Federalists, 98 antifeminism, 462
antiglobalism, 53, 365; in France, 376; of hard right, 363, 366–67; ultranationalist, 345 anti-intellectualism, 10–11, 369–70 anti-Jacksonians, 98, 103–4, 106 Anti-Jacobin, 429 anti-parliamentarism, 45, 447 antirationalist/antirationalism, 396–97; as overthinking in politics, 6–7, 20; for Oakeshott, 296 anti-Roosevelt Liberty League, 289 antisocialist laws (Bismarck’s Germany), 190 anxiety, and desire for authority, 408–9 Ashridge College, founding of, 182 authenticity/inauthenticity, 62, 455 authoritarian dictatorships, 217 authoritarian/authoritarianism, 461; conservatives as, 73, 263; vs. fascism, 263;
and illiberal, anti-rationalist traditions, 7;
intellectuals and, 119; as keyword, 420; right-wing, 3, 263; Trump’s praise of, 348;
in Vichy regime, 173–74 authority and authorities: as argument ender, 7; changing, 57; to conservatives, 48–49; contested, 73; exercise of, 300–301; Hobbesian vision of, 299–300; liberal disregard for, 296–97; to liberals, 48; as natural, 261; need to reestablish, 72–73; and power, 51, 420, 431; in social order, 390 big government, conservative opposition to, 291, 292, 335–36; George W. Bush criticized for, 368

Bill of Rights, 458

bioengineering, contrasting conservative attitudes to, 380, 403

Bismarck myth, 187

Brexit, 340, 348–49, 436

Brexiters, 332, 355–56; financing of, 343; typical, 358–59

Britain: aloneness of, 298; anti-EU campaign in, 339, 340; anti-Europeanism in, 60, 348–49, 444; capitalist modernity in, 80–81; collusive party contest in, 81–82; “Conservative century” of, 43–44; conservative compromise in, 175–85; conservative dilemma in, 179; dangerous estrangement of society and government in, 298–99; divided right in, 80–88; expanded franchise in, 308; fascism and, 181–82, 439–40; General Strike in, 181;
growing prosperity in post-1945, 279–80;

capitalism: conservatism’s survival under, 120–21; crumbling of, 217–18; cultural failings of, 138–39; Darwinian, 371, 447; defense of, 207–21, 463; democracy and, 215–18, 413–14, 417, 463; idea of property and, 57–58; imperialism and, 216–17; industrial, 123, 138–39, 451, laissez-faire, 450; liberal, 66, 175, 204, 353, 404; stability of, 215–16; threat of intellectuals to, 218–19 capitalist modernity, 42; as keyword, 421; in late 18th-century Britain, 80–81; perpetual disturbance of, 49; as unstoppable, 123 capture theme, on the right, 189–90, 213, 230, 235, 320, 350, 353, 367, 372
Subject Index

Carlton Club meeting, 180 Cartel des Gauches, 170
Catholic Center Party (Germany), 130–31, 189
Catholic paternalism, 133, 461
Catholic-Protestant reconciliation, 128–29
Catholicism: in German politics, 287; revival of, 22–23; social, 128, 130–31, 284, 440, 456, 457–58, 461. See also Roman Church Catholics, emancipation of in Britain, 82–83
Centre for Policy Studies, 281
Centre Nationale des Indépendants et Paysans (CNIP), 272, 273–74 change, 14–15, 423; gradual, 49, 455–56; as keyword, 421; radical, 289, 446; social, 15, 18–19, 72, 83, 140, 213, 360
Christian Awakening, 101, 132
Christian conservatism, 292; neoconservatives and, 323; victimhood theme of, 352
Christian Democracy, 411–12; European, 410–11; in France, 110, 410, 429; labor and, 412; opening paths to, 110; in Poland and Hungary, 381; in post-1945 Germany, 282–88, 410; “realist” criticism of, 410–13
Christian Democratic Party (CDU, Germany), 44, 283–85, 286, 288, 327, 443
Christian right, 333, 372
Christian Social Party, 443
Christian Social Union (CSU), 283, 284–85, 286, 288, 327, 443
Christianity: aesthetic aspects of, 22–24; conservative defense of, 126–37; as higher authority, 130; respect for human person in, 123; social mission of, 110. See also Calvinism; Catholicism; Christian democracy; Protestants Cicero, 398
civic equality, as part of liberal framework, 73–74 civic morality, in U.S. as item of conservative intellectual revival, 315 civil associations, 296; independence of, 454; moral authority of, 461 civil rights, opposition to and backlash against, 291–92, 293–94; opposition to extension of, 318–19; Southern resistance to, 45, 199–200 class myths, for Schmitt, 257 clerisy, for Coleridge, 110, 118, 137–42, 139–41, 451 cloaking/unmasking, as keyword, 419
Cobdenite liberalism, 330, 331–32
Cold War, 270–71; anticomunism in, 295–96; end of, 320, 328; Reagan administration and, 320; Second (1978–86), 294, 306, 323, 327, 330, 332–33 collective bodies, character of, for Gierke, 150–51 collective decision-making, contrasting attitudes to on the right, 232–33 collective guilt, for Maistre, 9 collectivism: vs. individualism, 149, 155–56, 210, 411; of Paris Commune, 233–35; vs. private ownership, 463; Utopian ideals and, 308 collectivist tyranny: and ideology, 308; as feared by liberals and conservatives, 310–11 colonialism, 45; corruptions of, 451; liberal, 168; paternal, 429 Commentary, 321, 322 commercial society, 10–11; distrust of, 22 common faith, binding society, 6–7, 17–18, 62–63, 127, 133, 261, 457, 461, 463 communism: as conservatism’s Other, 363; Free World vs., 270–71; opposition to, 251, 315–16, 432, 450. See also anticomunism community, 45, 49, 113, 142, 151–52, 155–56, 253, 308, 314, 347, 388, 393, 410, 444, 442; as collections of individuals, 152–53; right-wing liberal critique of, 410–13; Principles of in Vichy, 435, 445 compassion, as social vice, 214–15 “concurrent” majority, as safeguard in democracy, 114–15

For general queries, contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu
Congress, strength of in late 19th century, 198–99 consensus disruptors, present-day hard right as, 365–66

conservatives/conservatism: in America, 194–204; authoritarian variety, 420; authority for, 48–49; battle plan in post-1945 U.S. for, 309; birth of, 41–42; in Britain, 175–85; communitarian, 154; costs of compromise with liberalism, 269–70; as creed of resistance, 248–49; defending religion, 124–37; dilemmas for, 62–65; in early 19th century, 42–44; as “endemically contested entity”, 59; engagement vs. disengagement of with liberal modernity, 251; foes of, 316–17; in French Third Republic, 164–74; frustration felt by, 62; in Germany, 186–94; goal to reestablish authority of, 72–73; history of, 419; individualistic, 248–49; inegalitarianism of, 53–54; as keyword, 419; laissez-faire variety, 162–64, 195–97, 203, 211, 213, 215; mainstream, 269–71, Parts IV, V, VI passim; managerial, 449, 458; mastering modernity, 43; moderate or radical, 55; moral variety, 59, 148, 317, 336, 385, 449; morally rooted, 59, 408–10; history of compromise with liberalism (see also reconciliation), 77, 160–61, 162–64, 415–16; obstructionist, 42–43, 188; opposed to political rationalism, 6–7; origin of label of, 60; philosophical sources of, 424–27; as political practice, 41–48; political success and intellectual uncertainty of, 66; post-1945, 269–71; in post-1945 America, 288–94; in post-1945 Britain, 277–82; in post-1945 France, 271–77; in post-1945 Germany, 282–88; pragmatic, 406–9; recalcitrant, 45, 79–80, 161, 169, 185; recasting, 303–5; second-order or negative, 311; six-part test for in Kirk’s thought, 316; triple advantages of in support from wealth, institutions, opinion, 43; unreconciled thinkers of, 383–406; variety of ways to pigeonhole/categorize, 58–59. See also conservative thinkers/intellectuals; hard right; liberal conservatism; right conservative authoritarian, as keyword and contrasted with fascist, 420 Conservative Central Office, 177 conservative exaggeration, habit of, taste for, 13, 397 conservative fascists, as keyword, 420 conservative intellectuals. See conservative thinkers/intellectuals conservative-liberal rapprochement, 84, Parts IV, V, VI passim conservative liberalism, 205, 322, 416, 423; ammunition of against democratic liberalism, 205–6; vs. disruptive liberalism, 60; neoconservatives and, 320 conservative outlook, 48–49, 419; adaptability of ideas in, 56–58; in aesthetic, ethical criticism of liberal modernity, 47–48; blurring with liberal outlook, 54–56; contrasted with liberal outlook, 50–54 Conservative Party (Britain): adapting liberal-social reform, 279; lack of leadership in, 330; post-Thatcher, 331 Conservative Party Conference Statement on Foreign Policy (1949), 279

Conservative Realism, 410 Conservative Research Department (Britain), 182, 278 conservative revolution (Germany), 243–45, 247–48, 456, 460 conservative thinkers/intellectuals, 46–47; attacking cultural and ethical decline, 242–54; attacking liberal democracy, 255–64; conservative need for, 137–42; defending capitalism, 207–21; post-1945, 295–324; views of the people of, 221–42 Constitution (U.S.), 199; Bill of Rights in, 458; counter-democratic mechanisms in, Subject Index

511

114; discourse on, 112, 114–15; drafting of, 35–36; due-process clauses of, 432; Fifth and Fourteen amendments to, 36, 105, 200, 432
Constitutional Convention, Philadelphia, 34 constitutional monarchy, 21, 32–33 constitutions: balancing nation’s competing inner forces, 139; as protection from undue power, 112–14; Prussian, 119, 121–22; for unacceptable ends, 111–17. See also Constitution (U.S.) continuity-coherence problem, 56–58
Corn Laws, 441; opposition to repeal of, 84, 443; repeal of, 82–83, 441 corporations, character of, for Gierke, 150 counterliberal orthodoxy, difficulty creating, 366 counterliberal publications, 366–67 countryside: conservative views of, 189, 234; healthiness of, 22, 126, 462; as keyword, 421; love of, 167, 434; needs of, 451
Croix de Feu, 171
Crossfire, 368 crowds: bestiality of, 224; collective mind of, 229–30; herdlike, 229; heterogeneous and homogeneous, 230; irrationality of, 224, 231, 232–33; mass behavior of, 230–31; nature of, 458. See also people en masse cultural blight, 393–94 cultural geography, 360 culture wars, 293 culture(s): characterization of, 253–54; decline of, 242–54; rise and fall of, 245 custom: authority of, 415; cloak of, 419; denial of, 24; moral reliability of, 396–97;

relative allegiance to, 392; in social order, 64–65; wisdom of, 58

Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, 15, 27 decade, 11, 214, 367, 403, 436; cultural, 48, 94, 242–54; economic, 178; in hard right rhetoric, 349–50; as keyword, 419; of liberal democracy, 381–82; of nation, 172, 332, 342, 349–50, 444, 446; of Western civilization, 244–45, 382 Decline of the West (Spengler), 244 democracy: capitalism and, 215–18, 413–14, 417, 463; distrust of, 98–99; as double target for conservatives, 263–64; as keyword, 419; opposition to, 101–2, 131; participatory, 356–57; procedural vs. substantive, 117; representation in, 151, 257; “self-control” in, 219; supposed unwisdom of electorates, 238; Whigs in, 101–2. See also economic democracy; electoral democracy; liberal democracy; mass democracy democratic liberalism: conservative liberal ammunition against, 205–6; mistrust of, 462–63. See also democracy; liberalism Democrats (U.S.): division of, 196–97; early 20th-century reforms of, 203 desegregation, 60, 290–92, 294, 319, 321, 432, 435–36 Deutschkonservative Partei (DKP), 92–94, 435 disengagement, with liberal modernity, 246–47 Disgruntled Labour Voter, 358 dissent: from conservative mainstream, 328; from hyperliberalism, 363; from liberal modernity, 252–53; two kinds of within the right, 416; unrestricted and goalless, as conservative target, 6

Dreyfus Affair, 167, 268, 447

Eagle Forum, 462
East India Company, 12 economic democracy, 162–64; as keyword, 419; resistance to, 161; as wishful thinking, 207–8 economic liberalism, 74, 196–97, 200; anticommunism and, 295–96, 315–16; business freedom and limited government in, 295–96; efficiency-minded, 84; of July Monarchy, 273; as keyword, 420; reconciling with conservatism, 120–21, 221; supercharged, 345

For general queries, contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu
economic “middle way,” 464 egalitarian language, conservative adoption of, 54 egalitarianism: conservative attitudes to, 53–54; as delusion, 381; exaggerating people’s capacities, 125–26; qualitative, 296, 457 electoral democracy: as competitive struggle for power, 219; liberal capitalism and, 413–14 elites, loss of uncontested authority by, 72–73 engagement with liberal modernity, 246–47 Enlightenment, 19–20; as “a machine for demolishing outlooks,” 458; criticism of, 26–27, 400; denial of faith from, 9, 459; God’s punishment for, 9; Jeffersonians and, 101; liberal values of, 312, 318, 382; tradition-sapping ideas of, 75 enracinement (rootedness), 347–48 enterprise, 32, 203, 209; distinct from civil association, for Oakeshott, 461; local, 292; private, 281, 436; protection for, 420 entrepreneurship, 209 epistocracy, 448 equal rights, 321, 452, 461; opposition to, 461; to women, 294 Equal Rights Amendment, 462 equality, 53–54; conservative objections to, 264; as keyword, 420; only in legal sense, 147–48; philosophical errors of, 142–56 escape into action, 206 establishment, 463; as keyword, 420 ethical anomie, 243–54 ethical individualism, 110 ethnos, 351, 380
ethnos-demos distinction, 351, 353
European integration, 304
European peace, post-Napoleonic guidelines for, 27
European Union, national sovereignty in, 412–13
Europeanism, 274, 332, 380, 439, 444
Evangelical Church, 118 evangelicals, 132, 135 exaggeration, examples of conservative habit of, 13, 130, 152, 231, 320, 397 exclusion, 351 exclusionary nationalism, 57, 59, 227–28 experience: aesthetic, 435; in conservative thought, 15, 26, 34, 385, 400–1, 407, 409, 420, 427, 455, 457, 466; as keyword, 420; lack of among liberal intellectuals, 72, 216; religious, 154; war and, 246
Fabians, 207
Falloux laws, 78 family, 271, 324, 444, 453; bonds of, 64; duty to, 300; as keyword, 420; poet of, 180 family values, 335, 346, 438, 442, 462 fanaticism, roots of, 332 fascism, 263; British, 181–82, 439–40; as keyword, 420; vs. populism, 354–55. See also authoritarianism; Nazism fascist dictatorships, 217
Fatherland Party (Germany), 193 Federalist Society, 388 fellowship and lordship, for Gierke, 150–51 fideism and reasonableness of faith, for Newman, 133
Fifth Amendment (U.S. Constitution), 200, 432
Fifth Republic, 272
Figaro, 366
Firing Line, 317449
First Things, 386, 387
folkways, for Sumner, 212 forgotten man argument, 214–15, 291, 465 Forgotten White Democrat, 338, 359
Fourteenth Amendment (U.S. Constitution), 36, 105, 200, 432
France: 1789 monarchy in, 65, 176; anti-free trade lobby in, 439; anti-multiculturalism and antiglobalism in, 376–78; anti-republicans in, 59; anti-Semitism in, 167, 377–78, 447; center-right unity in, 337–38;
collectivists in, 233–35; colonialism of, 275; conservative label originated in, 60; constitutional Chartre of, 75–76; corrupt classe politique in, 350; disappointment of liberal monarchy in, 76; end of monarchy in, 74–76; Fourth Republic of, 272; growing prosperity in, 272–73; right in, 277, 334, 346–50, 442, 438; hard-right roots in, 353; hard-right themes in, 350; improvisations of right in, 74–80; interwar hard right in, 249–50; liberal conservatism in, 56; liberal democracy in, 74; mainstream right of, 61; moral conservatism in, 379; National Front (Front National) in, 340, 343, 344, 346–47, 350, 377, 438; National Revolution of, 445–46; nationalism in, 228; New Right in, 379–80, 448; opposition to immigrants in, 377–78; overthrow of Restoration monarchy in, 71; Popular Front in, 170, 172, 262–63, 437–38; post-1945, 271–77, 442; post–WW I decline in, 249–50; post–WW II right in, 270; Quatorze Juillet made a holiday in, 166; Republics of, 43; Restoration era in, 75–76; Second Republic of, 77, 78, 233–34; singularity of, 379; Socialist Party in, 336–37; "trentes glorieuses" in, 272; UDF-RPR center-right in, 380; Vichy regime of, 173–74. See also French Revolution; The Terror; Vichy France franchise, extended, 73–74; universal, 93, 101, 226, 230–31; Franco-German ties, 174, 192, 274, 333, 433; fraternity, false hope of, 148; Free Conservatives. See Frei Konservative Partei (FKP); free love, 376–77; free-market conservatism, 384, 414; free-market radicalism, suspicion of, 397; free markets: damage of to society, 389–90; political promotion of, 413–14; Free Soil Republicans, 98, 447; free trade, 78, 84, 93, 169, 178, 186, 189, 330, 332, 369–70, 437; freedom: British vs. American concepts of, 397–98; just laws and, 134–35, 448–49. See also liberties; Frei Konservative Partei (FKP, Germany), 92–93, 189, 190, 437; French Africa, independence for, 275; French Communist Party, strength of, 272; French pride, 23–24; French Revolution, 459; American’s responses to, 31–32; Burke on, 3, 5, 10–11, 13; conservative arguments against, 36–37; contrasted with American Revolution, 30–31; Declaration of the Rights of Man and, 27; German philosophers’ views on, 28–30; Maistre on, 5, 7–9; queen’s fate in, 18; roots of, 75; Third Republic linked to, 166; writers against, 119–20; friend-enemy distinction, for Schmitt, 255–56, 258–59; frontier society, 99–102; frustration: mutual, 36; conservative, 62; and rage, 271; fundamentalists: Christian, in 20th-century U.S., 135, 335; conservatives as, for Sloterdijk, 403; Gaullism, 272, 274–75; difficulty categorizing, 276; geopolitics, 17–18, 26, 256, 328; oracular, 347, 438; German Confederation, unstable, 90; German conservatism: cross-tensions in, 89–90; distinctive factors in, 187–88; purged of chauvinism and pagan irrationalism, 304; German unification, 92, 95, 188–89, 333–34; army as national bond in, for Treitschke, 227; Germanness (German national feeling), 149–50, 227; disappointments of with unification, 334; before Napoleonic age, 225–26;
Germany: AfD in, 340, 343, 344–46, 350, 375–76, 446; anti-Semitism in, 190–91, 443; anti-Weimar conservative revolution in, 193; antisocialist laws in, 190; Basic Law of 1949 in, 283, 437; CDU-CSU alliance, 284–85, 288, 327, 443; conservatism in, 88–96; conservatism in post-1933, 270; conservative ambivalence in, 186–94; conservative revolution in, 243–45, 247–48, 456, 460; division of, 282, 286–88; economic and political reconstruction of, 282–83; exclusionist nationalism in, 227–28; Federal Republic in, 285; Free Democrat Party (FDP) in, 284, 285; free-market–anti-immigrant alliance in, 339; Frei Konservative Partei (FKP) in, 189, 190, 437; German Conservative Party (DKP) in, 95, 189; German National People's Party (DNVP) in, 150, 191–94, 435, 446; German People's Party (DVP) in, 191, 192, 193; hard right in, 332–34, 340, 343; hard-right roots in, 353; hard-right themes in, 350; improvising of constitution of, 188; liberal-conservative cross in, 55–56; liberal-democratic right in, 248; National Liberals in, 92, 93, 150, 189–91, 193, 454, 465; new voices of right in, 374–76; normalization of West Germany in, 286; old order defenders in, 91; patriotism of people in, 227; philosophical anthropology in, 296; political parties of, 92, 189; populism in, 356–57; pressure for reunification of, 287; recasting conservatism in, 303–5; remaking middle ground in post-1945, 282–88; the right (die Rechte) in, 44, 60–61; right-wing parties in, 92; Social Democratic Party (SPD) in, 189, 288; social-market model in, 332–33; thinkers of the right in, 301–5; Third Reich in, 246; universal suffrage in, 92, 93; unreconciled conservatives in, 96. See also German unification; Hitlerism; Nazism; Prussia; Weimar Republic; Wilhelmine Reich

Gilded Age, 194–95, 197
globalism/globalization: in Britain, 297, 330; economic, 53, 364, 365; of Eisenhower, 290; hard right opposition to, 345; liberal, 360; of Thatcher, 297; Utopian, 365

globalists, hyper-liberal, 415, 436 Glorious Revolution (1688), 120 gnosticism, 309–11, 465 goods, seven basic, for Finnis, 453 governing, four ways of, for Newman, 133 government: failure of, 363; need for popular control of, 33–35 gradualism, 59, 332
Grand Army of the Republic (U.S.), 197–98
Great Society, 200; conservative opposition to, 291, 315 Groupement de Recherche et d’Etudes pour la Civilisation Européenne (GRECE), 379–80 guilds, character of, for Gierke, 150–51 habits, 16, 22; constituting a nation, 9; of society, 213, 216, 218, 220; of thought, 128 Halves (German liberals), 121 happiness, concepts and nature of, 86, 124, 138, 141, 148, 241 hard right: in American grain, 367–73; antiliberal modernist invective of, 352; characteristic marks of, 340–41, economic libertarianism and nation-firs'tism in, 342; exclusionary theme of, 351; factors in resurgence of, 342; in France before 1914, 434; in France in 1930s and Vichy, 434–35; in France post-1945, 277; herald of, 296, 297–300, 462; historic roots of, 352–53; as keyword, 420; liberal status quo and, 66; mainstream conservative reaction to, 341–42; message of, 345; as populist and libertarian amalgam, 416; populist and nationalist character of, 342; rise of, 328–29, 339–49; spokesman for, 294; themes of, 349–54; ultranationalism and super-libertarianism of, 345; unilateralism of, 351; in unreconciled conservatism
subject index

tradition, 342; victimhood theme of, 351–52; voters for, 344–45

harm principle, 147

Harzburg Front, 194

have/have-nots, 99, 427; as keyword, 420, 422 high cultures, rise and fall of, 245 highways program (U.S.), 290 hinge parties, 94, 284

historical knowledge, 296–97

Hitlerism, 255; British sympathy for, 181, 183; opposition to, 183, 184

Hobbesian politics, 410–11

Home Rule (Ireland), 177; urging armed rebellion against, 59–60 human anchorage, 145, 312, 396, 422 human immune systems, for Sloterdijk, 402

human nature, 392, 465; denial of, 401; as keyword, 420; understanding of, 392–93

human progress: achievability of, 51–52; narrow views of, 241

humanism/humanitarianism, 143; opposition to, 254; overambitious, 302 humanity: liberal view of, 261; unregenerate, 9–10. See also people, the humans: as bodily creatures, 401; improvability of, 402–3, 465; presocial, 4, 9, 4, 11, 37, 390, 459; sociability of 14, 16, 391, 395, 424. See also humanity; people, the; people en masse hyper-individualism, 408 hyper-liberal status quo, 362–64; opposition to, 364–406; supporters of, 406–14 hyper-liberalism, 419, 421 ignorance, 14, 222, 300

illiberal democracy, 162

The Imaginative Conservative, 369 imperfection, 49, 304, 424–25, 451; as keyword, 421; moral, 37; politics of, 62, 406 imperialism, capitalism and, 216–17

Indian Removal Act, 71

individualism: Benthamite, 144; vs. collectivism, 149, 210; conservative, 248–49; economic, 156, 411–12; error of, 142–43; ethical, 110; “humanist” as clearer term, 143; liberal, 128; looseness of idea and slipperiness of term, 110, 128, 142, 156, 210; moral, for MacIntyre, 314–15; opposition to, 144–45

individualist theory: mistake of, 152–53; moral claims of, 142–44 individuality: as enabler of totalitarianism, 466; Mill’s “eulogies to,” 147 industrial capitalism, 134; distrust of, 139

Industrial Charter, 279

industrialism, 201–2; vs. agrarians, 251–52 inegalitarianism, 53–54, 208, 381, 411, 459

innovation: as keyword, 421; trust in, 15–16

Institut für Staatspolitik, 374 institutions: commonly accepted, 301; in social order, 390–91; well-functioning, 302 intellectual quiet, 296

intellectualism: British conservatives and, 182–83; political, 16 intellectuals: Burke’s attack on, 10–11; conservatives’ need for, 137–42. See also conservative thinkers international openness, costs of, 365

Iran, U.S. hostages in, 327

Iraq occupation, 323

irreligion, 75; opposition to, 292

Jacksonian tradition, 100–101

Jacksonians, 71, 98, 357–58, 446–47; democratic, 99–101; expansionism of, 99; liberty concept of, 103

Jeffersonians, 101; vision of, 100–101

July Days (1830), 33

July Monarchy: end of, 75, 76–77; German response to, 91

Junge Freiheit, 375

Junkers, 88–89, 92; die-hard, 440 justice: retributive and compensatory, 8; social, 273, 347, 390, 411, 431, 438

Kansas-Nebraska Act, 104

Kapp Putsch, 192

Keynesianism, 217, 279–80, 294, 363, 415, 438, 440
Khaki Election, 178
Knowsley Creed, 84
Konservatismus, 60–61
Kreuzzzeitung, 435, 446
Kulturkampf, 128–29, 130, 456 kynics, for Sloterdijk, 400
La libre parole, 434
La Manif pour Tous, 379

labour: in material progress, 208–9; protections of in France, 169; rights of, 412. See also unions Labour Party (Britain): losses of to Conservative Party, 279–80; membership of, 358–59; social reform agenda of, 278 laissez-faire conservatism, 162–64, 195–97, 203, 211, 213, 215 land, as keyword, 421 “lasting things,” 393, 394
law(s): bottom-up vs. top-down view of, 150–51; conservative force of in U.S., 200–201; as God-given moral order, 118; grown from collective bodies, 144–45; morality of, 384–86; operation of, 148–49; private, 120–21; as promoter of society’s good, 146; public, 120–21; restricting personal conduct, 383–84 left: retreat of, 415; unity of, 432. See also unions Left Hegelianism, 30, 118, 123, 426 left-right division, 61; in mid-19th century France, 75–80 liberal capitalism: cultural failings of, 138–39; stability of, 215–16 liberal capture, 372 liberal centrism, 407–8; as hard right enemy, 343 liberal consensus, 382, 416 liberal conservatism: capitalism and, 120–21; complacency of, 66; intellectuals and thinkers of, 46–47; lacking strategic opponent, 362–63; Others of, 363; Peel as creator of, 83–84; in trap of success, 328–29 liberal democracy: in Britain, 185; conservative compromise with, 43, 160–61, 269–70; contrasted with illiberal democracy and liberal non-democracy, 162; danger to health of, xi; delayed achievement of in U.S., 162; dependence of on balance of property and democracy, 46; dependence of on right, 45–46; left-right distinction as core in, 61; as left’s child, 45; political discrediting of, 255–64; republicanism in France and, 160; stifling sources of vitality, 464; in Weimar Germany, 187, 192–94 liberal equality, 117 liberal label, origin of in Spain, 60 liberal media, suspicion of, 369–70 liberal modernity: conservative opposition to, 66; emergence of, 72–74; ethical and aesthetic criticism of, 47–48; failure of, 305–15; German conservatives and, 92; as keyword, 422; moral emptiness of, 20–21; purposelessness in, 259; shared morality in, 16; unreconciled right’s rejection of, 162; Utopian, 453–54 liberal-modernity orthodoxies: post-1945 conservative responses to, 295–324; right-wing, 408–9; stifling popular voice, 373; unreconciled conservative’s philosophical critique of, 383–406 liberal outlook: blurring with conservative outlook, 54–56; contrasted with conservative outlook, 50–54; as keyword, 419, 421 liberal progress, costs and unintended consequences of, 52–53 liberal secularist orthodoxy, 388 liberal social reforms: British Conservatives adapting, 279; shelving of in post-1945 Britain, 278 Liberal status quo, 55; hard right contempt for, 66; present-day conservative defenses of, 406ff; widespread acceptance of, 405; as wrong or ugly way to live, 66

For general queries, contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu
Subject Index

liberalism: as anarchy, 261; authority in, 48; belief of in equality, 53; belief of in human progress, 51–52; birth of, 42; change and, 42–43, 205; conservative compromise with, 42–45; conservative concessions to reformism of, 177; conservative vs. disruptive, 60; contempt for, 239–42; as death of nations, 246; destructiveness of, 124; disregard of social and cultural authority in, 296–97; incoherent promises of, 264; as keyword, 421; laissez-faire, 185; left and right opposition to, 255; market, 127–28, 162–64, 332–33; mid-20th–century disorder of, 305–15; mistaken picture of society of, 393; neoconservatives and, 321; overreach of, 263–64; philosophical attack on, 110–11; retreat of, 415; right-wing, 160–61; social-minded, 178, 269, 320, 352, 437, 449, 461; thought of as anarchy, 261; top-down, 77; undemocratic, 142; WW I damage to, 242–43. See also conservative liberalism; democratic liberalism; economic liberalism liberals: conservative alliance with, 145; as constructors and disruptors, 72; as messengers of demanding middle class, 73; moderate, 55, 129; neoconservatives and inactivism of, 322

libertarianism, 393; American, 413–14; in German AfD, 34; hard right and, 416; neoconservatives and, 322; outlook of, 421; in present-day hard right, 342–43; supercharged, 345

liberties: as burden, 303–4; held by right, 461; philosophical errors of, 142–56; protection of property and, 390–91; spirit of resistance and, 32; unrestricted, 6; Whig vs. Jacksonian concept of, 103

Magna Carta, 120

majoritarianism, 111, 457; constitution as defense against, 113–14; opposition to, 109, 114; suspicion of, 117; tyranny of, 34–35

managerialism, 217–18, 312–13

Manhattan Declaration, 388

market economics, 99, 232, 315 market liberalism, 127–28, 162–64, 332–33

market society, 218–19

markets: extended, 363; self-correcting, 58; wisdom of, 296

Marxism, 220, 250; ethical, 241; proletarian self-rule myth of, 257

Marxist cohesion, 257

mass democracy, 461; fear of, 130, 173, 229–30, 233; universal suffrage and, 230–31

mass society, control of, 230

material progress, 52; labor and elite in, 208–9

Merkur, 304–5

Middle Ages: intellectual reevaluation of, 307–8; reasoning and argument in, 314

military-industrial complex, 291

minority veto, 113, 114

mobs: common people forming, 222, 237; dangers of, 79, 233; fear of, 229, 458. See also crowds

moderate-radical, as keyword, 421

moderation, 55, 59

modernity: embracing critically, 254; humanity’s fall into, 309–14; as keyword, 421–22; resistance to, 102; from schismatic conflict, 402; spiritual emptiness of, 252–53, 374; undermining itself, 312. See also capitalist modernity; liberal modernity

monarchism, 262–63

monarchy: constitutional, 121; as "least imperfect" form of government, 262; liberal, 74

Monday Club, 280

© Copyright, Princeton University Press. No part of this book may be distributed, posted, or reproduced in any form by digital or mechanical means without prior written permission of the publisher.
Monroe Doctrine, 97, 428 moral conservatives, 59, 148, 317, 336, 385, 449

moral majority, 452

moral permissiveness, 292; neoconservatives and, 322 moral policing, 214, 464–65 moral regeneration, need for, 409–10 moral resistance ethic, 313 morality: changing public views of, 386–87; contradictoriness of, 153–55; disorder of, 306–0; of duty, 22; good and bad in, 385; of interest, 22; liberal flawed picture of, 312; liberal misunderstandings of for Scruton, 393; in local custom, 396–97; for MacIntyre, 312–15; medieval traditional approach to, 383–84; Nietzschean, 239; as protection of weak against strong, 146; psychology of, 152; rooted in extra-human order, 405; universal standards of, 385

Mugwumps, 196

multiculturalism, 376–78

multilateralism, 271; abandonment of, 351

Munich Agreement, 432

mutual frustration, U.S. Constitution as harmonious system of, 36 myths: nostalgic, 299; rational and irrational, for Schmitt, 257 nation: as community, for Calhoun, 113; decline of, 349–50; devotion to, 257–58; as ethos, 351; formation of, 222–23; fostering of feeling for, 228–29; friend-enemy distinction binding, 258–59; inner and outer enemies of, 350–51; as keyword, 422; mindedness of, 225, 333–34, 360, 411; national people, idea of, 45, 222, 360; need for diversity and disagreement in, 391; order in and among, 25–31; patriotism and pride in, 23–24; recovery of pride in, in post-1945 France, 272; renewal of values of, 206; as unifying ideas and myths of, 244–5; unity of in diverse society, 294–95; unwritten laws constituting, 9.

See also state nation-state, creation of, 121–22

National Centre of Independents and Farmers (CNIP, France), 272–74, 437, 441

National Front (France): decline and capture themes of, 350; finances of, 343; herald for, 377; rise of, 346–47; supporters of, 344

National Liberals (NL, Germany), 92, 93, 150, 189–91, 193, 454, 465 national power, uninhibited use of, 226–27

National Rally (France), 346–47

nationalists/nationalism, 57, 119, 167, 191, 330; competitive, 57; exclusionary, 57, 227; vs. globalism, 330; among historians, 225–27, 332, 443; 19th-century and present-day sense of contrasted, 35; Powell’s “indexical,” 299; supercharged by hard right, 345. See also nativist/nativism nativist/nativism, conservative, 342–43; exclusionary, 340

Navigation Acts, 28

Nazism, 194, 217, 255, 256, 258, 355; unselﬁshness about, 305

neoconservatives, 320–21, 457; achievements of, 323–24; belief of in power of ideas, 323; Christian conservatives and, 323; in Germany, 218, 232, 410; in government, 322–23; Iraq occupation as nemesis of, 323; paleoconservatives and, 368–69; targets of, 321–22; three generations of, 408–9, 457; in U.S., 101, 141, 218, 297, 305, 317, 320–24, 338, 408–9, 457

Neues Abendland, 304

New Deal, 199–200, 363; conservative opposition to, 291, 315; dime-store, 292, 434; opposition to, 443

normality, in post-1945 France, 271–73 norms: authority for, 19; natural resistance of, 213–14; universal resistance for, 301–2

North-South compromise (U.S.), 35–36 nostalgia, reason replacing, 117–24

For general queries, contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu notables (France), 74, 76, 77, 78 obedience, 7, 9, 27, 454, 459; to just laws, 133, 135; partisan, 20, 450

Objectivism. See Randism

One-na tion conservatism, 59, 415

One-Nation Tories, 278, 298, 299, 452, 462

Operation Rubicon, 78

order, 463; maintaining, 176. See also social order organic metaphor, 422

Orleanist notables, 74, 76, 78

Ostpolitik, 443

pagan society, 253

paleoconservatives, 364–65, 368–71

paleo-

Republicans, 449

Paris Commune, 10, 79–80, 233–34, 443; account of, 453; conflict in, 453; crushing of, 444–45 parliamentary sovereignty, 73–74

parliaments: in control of state authority, 120–21, 122; disdain for, 242; ineffectiveness of, 257; in liberal democracy, 257

Parti Populaire Français, 171, 250 participation, 32, 34, 71, 133, 263, 461 participatory democracy, 356–57

permissiveness, 292, 315, 322, 336, 363, 366, 436

people, the: common, 206, 222, 233, 451, 464; demonizing of, 233–34; en masse, 229–33; four historical understandings of, 222; as keyword, 422; six conservative views of, 221–42; redemptive hostility of, 224; right’s knowledge of, 223–24; stupidity of, 224, 236–37; as unthinking herd, 237; as well-intentioned but biddable, 235; venality of, 224; without discipline and anxious, 296. See also crowds personal rights, 461 philosophical anthropology, 296, 392

Pietists, 94, 188, 433

piety, loss of, 307–8

Pittite Whigs, 81–82

plebiscites, 257

political, the concept of for Schmitt, 256–57, 258 political correctness, 238 political equality, 107 political modesty, 59, 296 political obligation, 9, 258 political violence, 240–41 politics, limits of, 421 popular anger, in hard right’s rise, 342–43 popular control, need for, 33–35

Popular Front (France), 170, 172; collapse of, 437–38; government of, 262–63

popular myths, 240, 257 popular resistance, French and American revolutions as, 32 popular sovereignty, 456; character of, 223; criticism of, 257 populism, 107, 151, 354–61; vs. fascism, 354–55; herald of, 318; as keyword, 422; national, 417; origins of, 354; vs. participatory democracy, 356–57; right- and left-wing, 355–56; supporters of, 358–60; in U.S., 197, 357–58; Populist Democrats, 197

populists: conservative, 45, 156; in hard right, 360, 416; nation-first, 436; in office, 356; right-wing, 7, 45, 355–57, 372, 447, 456 positivism, 260–61, 400–401; legal, 309; secular morality of, 210–11 poverty: in 18th-century Europe, 28; capitalism as needed to eliminate, 212; economic individualism and, 411; German conservatives on, 90; permanence of, 208; social failure of, 194–95

Powellism, 298–300, 462 power: concentration of under Thatcher, 330–31; uninhibited exercise of, 226–27, 465 practice, as keyword, 422 pragmatic conservatism, 305, 406–9 prescription, as keyword, 422

presocial people (humans), 4, 9, 11, 37, 390, 459

Primrose League, 177

Professor Watchlist, 370

For general queries, contact webmaster@press.princeton.edu
Progress: as keyword, 423; liberal pieties of, 251–52. See also human progress; material progress; technical progress Progressive Republicans, 199
Progressivism, 196; middle-class, 357 property: changing idea of, 57–58; changing nature of, 163; defense of, 345; distribution of, 422; as keyword, 422; liberty and, 390–91; private, 309, 422, 426–27; as requirement for political participation, 32–33; social order and, 464 protectionism, 178, 437
Protestant Prussia, 283, 287, 304
Protestant Reformation, anarchy’s roots in, 261 Protestants: in American hard right, 359, 449; Catholics and, 90, 91, 445, 456; Scottish, 81; See also Calvinism; evangelicals protofascism, 354–55
Prussia: conservatives in, 89–90; Constitution of, 119, 121–22; monarchy in, 65; socialism in, 245, 247
Prussian Junkers, 88–89, 92, 440
Prussian social character, 123 public argument, 51; counterliberal, 366–67 Public Interest, 321, 322 public law, 120–21 public opinion, suppression of, 28 public reason, Utopian trust in, 464 Puritanism, 132, 136, 455 qualitative egalitarianism, 457
Quatorze Juillet (Fall of the Bastille), 166 Radical Programme, 207 radicals/radicalism, 59, 82, 128, 349, 352; adverbial, not substantive term, 59; anti-liberal, 244; anti-republican, 192; economic, 282, 330; as enemy of conservatism, 59; free-market, 397; as keyword, 421; working-class, 95 rage, 403–4; as keyword, 423; in post-1945 France, 272. See also anger raison d’état, 26, 454
Randism, mainstream conservative distrust of, 462
Rassemblement National Populaire, 431
Rassemblement pour la République, 276 rationalism; as evil, 126; Kantian, 135; in politics, 24–25, 391, 454, 461; scholastic, 383 reaction, rhetoric of, according to Hirschman, 13, 52–53 realist conservatism (conservative realism), 410–13 realpolitik, 26, two understandings of, 225–26, 465; uninhibited national power and, 226–27 reason: replacing nostalgia, 117–24; rooted in society and morality, 391–92 Reconstruction (U.S.), 105, 195 redemption, 393, 422; of liberal society, 456; through disengagement, 246–47; through self-improvement, 97–98 reform, counterresistance and, 15–16. See also social reforms Reform Act (British), 83 regionalism, 114, 131, 184, 252 Rehnquist court, 442 religion: authority in, 49; conservative defense of, 124–37; in establishing social order, 6, 109, 122, 126–28, 131–32, 137, 154, 310, 464; in hard-right Republicanism, 359; of humanity, 155, 455; inequality of possessions and, 131; modernity and, 109–10, 128; morality and, 126, 386; political authority and, 310; in secularized world, 131–32; as shared way of life, 126–27; as social bulwark, 62–64; as source of ethical order, 260–61. See also Catholicism; Christianity; evangelicals; Protestants; Roman Church religious authority, 464–65 religious awakening, 23, 94, 101, 132 religious differences, acceptance of, 63 religious right, 292, 323 representative institutions, 35 republican 1848ers (France), 75
Republican Party (U.S.): division of, 105, 196; dominance of, 44, 197–98; “hinge,” 293, 440; liberal-democratic status quo defenders vs. radicals in, 288–90; Reagan’s unification of, 335–33; 435–36, 448; human, 356, 380, 448, 459; labor, 331, 412; overextension of, 55; transportable, 15–16; universal, 15, 380, 423 rights-based liberalism, opposition to, 380 Rockefeller Republicans, 56
Rockingham Whigs, 81–82
Roman Church: as countermoral authority, 110, 129–30; French Third Republic and, 167–68; as source of ethical order, 260–61
Romantic conservatism, 27, 450
Romantic Young England Tories, 85–86, 452 romantics, faith and beauty in, 18–25 rootedness, 155, 301, 347–48, 423 rule of law, 59, 120–21, 464 rules-of-prudence approach, 47 scientism, 317, 393; resistance to, 389 scorn, 111, 352, 453, 464; as keyword, 423 Scottish Enlightenment, 135 second nature, 16, 300–305, 391; as keyword, 423 Second Reform Act (Britain), 85 secular decadence, 372–73, 452 secular modernity, 109, 191; religious arguments in, 124–25 segregation, in U.S.: defense of, 252, 319; in Eisenhower era, 290, 432; separate but equal doctrine of, 200 segregationist Democrats, 44 segregationist right, 45 self-government: people’s capacity for, 31–32; people’s incapability of, 5
September Program (German), 429
Sezession, “Finis Germania” issue of, 374–75 silent majority, 352, 356, 370, 449 slave trade, 141; Burke’s gradual recognition of wrongness of, 12–13 slavery: abolition of, 33, 36, 84, 101, 145, 197; Calhoun’s defense of, 115–17; issue of, slavery (continued) 430, 446, 450, 455; movement against, 32, 145, 155, 251–52, 460 Smart Set, 236, 460 sociability, 14, 391, 395, 424; fragility of, 16 social behavior, guided by myths, 240 social beliefs (norms) as clothes, 19, 391 social bond, moral power of, 50–51 social change, 15, 18–19, 72, 83, 140, 213, 360 social conflict, 61, 106, 304 Social Darwinism, 209, 213–14 social embeddedness. See social rootedness social evolution, 213–14 social fragmentation, 47–48, 373, 408–9 social nobility, 296, 457 social order: authority in, 48–49, 51; common faith in, 62–63; conscience and sense of duty in, 146; for conservatives vs. liberals, 42–43; continuity of in modernity, 18; customs serving, 64–65; intellectual innovators undermining, 10–11; morality in, 122; property and faith in, 464; religion in, 6, 109, 122, 126–28, 131–32, 137, 154, 310, 464; requirements for, 390–91; rule of law and, 120–21, 122; spontaneous, 296; unquestioned sovereign power in, 9 social reformism, post-New Deal, 291 social reforms, 79, 85–86, 178, 231, 234; of Bismarck, 188; conservative acceptance of, 181, 209, 416; futility of, 206; liberal, 278–79, 296, 363; New Deal, 291; opposition to, 215, 235–36 social rootedness, 154–55, 301, 347–48, 383, 423 social science, rhetoric of, 308–9 social unity, 259, 415; dependence of on common faith, 62–63; as keyword, 423; rethinking of, 56–57; as shared nationhood, 96 socialism, 125, 126–27; abandonment of, 415; compromise with, 161, 190; international, 23, 28, 80; as keyword, 419; parliamentary, 180, 207; Prussian, 245, 247; resistance to, 93, 94, 123, 130, 177, 180, 186, 205, 411, 436; for rich and poor, 371, 447; of Third Reich, 246; Utopian myth of, 240. See also economic democracy society: as competitive and conflicted, 50–51; human anchorage in, 396; land shaping, 462; liberalism’s mistaken picture of, 393; manager-controlled, 312–13, 449–50, 458; massification of, 310, 428, 466; “multicellular,” 150–51; politics reflecting, 17; reason rooted in, 391–92; rules of from divine providence or custom, 5–6; shared beliefs in, 260–61; subcommunities in, 149; ways to govern, 461 socioeconomic think tank, first, 224 soft power, 141, 451
Solidarité Française, 431
South, Calhoun’s defense of, 111–17
Southern Agrarians, 106, 243, 251–52
Southern Democrats, 105–6
Southern Warhawks, 112 sovereign power: balancing interests in, 17; constrained, 121; parliament and, 121–22 sovereignty: community and nation interlocked with, 411; of European Union members, 412–13; overlapping, 149. See also popular sovereignty Soviet Union: collapse of, 323, 333, 365; containment of, 290; rise of, 250–51; “rollback” against, 318 Spanish constitutionalists, 60 speaking to shock, hard right tactic of, 346
stagflation, 294
Stalwarts, in U.S. Republican Party, 196 state: authority of, 148–49; changing nature of, 58; Coleridge’s view of, 139; as frame of ethical life, 226–27; grown from collective bodies, as keyword, 423; 144–45; national life concentrated in, 465; overempowerment of, 296; patrimonial, 455; as whole of civil life, 460–61 status discrepancy, as source of political discontent, 359–60 status quo conservatism, failure of, 363–65
Stinnes-Legien Pact, 192
Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), 319 subjectivism, 302–3 sublime, the, 12; in thought of Burke, 4 subordination, 133, 197, 200, 461
Supreme Court (U.S.): conservative effects of, 200, 338–39, 341; justices of, 432, 442, 453; liberalism of, 292; nominees and appointments to, 36, 388 suspicion, hermeneutics of, 63 syndicalists, 240–41
Taft-Hartley Act, 289–90, 444
Tamworth Manifesto, 83, 84, 441 tariffs, 103, 112, 178, 190–91, 198, 437, 450; vs. free trade, 186, 190, 196, 332; regressive, 169; unfair, 115 Tea Party, 339; precursors of, 368, 462 technical progress, 41–42, 402–3 technocracy, 302, 324, 459 technocratic management, 274, 433 technocratic modernization, 172–74, 249–50, 444, 453–54
The Terror, 29–30, 339, 459; Burke and Maistre on, 5, 9, 11, 13; as God's punishment, 9; Hegel on, 30
Thatcherism, 280–81, 414; herald of, 297–300; labor rights and, 412
Third Republic (France), 43; anti-immigrant fears in, 172; Bloc National in, 169; call for technocratic modernization in, 172–73; clerical-anticlerical conflict in, 168; conservative compromise in, 164–74; criticism of, 260, 261–62; cultural authority in, 167–68; declaration of, 79; economic recovery in, 168–69; foreign policy in, 170–71; left-right conflict in, 164–65; liberal democracy in, 74; monarchist opposition in, 262–63; Opportunists in, 165–66; political turmoil in, 171–72; Radicals and Republicans in, 165–66; reforms in, 164; religious renewal in, 168; replacement of with Vichy regime, 173–74; republican synthesis in, 166; republicanism in, 160; right-democratic liberalism compromise in, 74–80; structural backwardness in, 172; trade and labor protections in, 169
Tivoli Program, 191, 443
Tory ”ditchers,” 59
Tory Party, 445; anti-liberal right and, 162; as conservative party, 60; division of in 1910s and 1920s, 45; as majority party, 43–44; modernization of, 175; renamed Conservatives, 82; representing the nation, 86–87; uniting interests of business, aristocracy, and church, 85–88; Wets and Dries in, 277–82, 298
Tory Ultras, 82, 83
Toryism: post-Thatcher, 441–42; social-minded, 454 totalitarianism, 263, 420; enablers of, 466. See also fascism towns, character of, 151 trade protection, 103, 178, 437; in Germany, 190 trade unions, 179–80 tradition, 14; as keyword, 423; authority of, 3; fighting for, 65–67; postwar, 316; vs. spiritually empty modernity, 252–53; wisdom of, 58
traditionalist conservatism, 154, 324, 457
transactionalism, 393–94
Trumpism, 359; heralds of, 367–73
ultranationalists, 345
Ultras, 76; anticommunist, 450; French, 20–21, 73, 76, 450; German, 90–91, 94, 95, 119, 435; Tory, 83–84, 179
Union for the Defense of Property and Promotion of the Welfare of All Classes, 91
Union pour la Démocratie Française (UDF), 274, 276
Union pour un Mouvement Populaire (UMP), 337 unions: restrictions on, 181, 200, 289–90; support for, 198; typical members of, 358
United Kingdom Independence Party (UKIP), 339

United States: Civil War of, 104–5; Congress’s strength in, 198–99; conservatism in, 60, 61; conservative compromise in, 195–204; conservative force of bar in, 200–201; divided Democrats in, 196–97; divided Republicanism in, 196; divided right in post-1945, 288–94; entrepreneurs and financiers of Gilded Age in, 195–96; entry into WW I, 250–51; European liberal upheavals and, 96–97; Gilded Age in, 194–95, 197; hard right in, 335–36, 343, 348; hard-right themes in, 350; hard-right tradition in, 367–73; Hegel’s view of, 30–31; industrialization of, 201–2; liberal-conservative cross in, 55; liberal modernity in, 74; liberal tradition in, 102; mainstream conservative reaction to Trump in, 344; national myth of, 228; national pride in, 202–3; North-South division of, 65, 104–6; political division of, 71; populism in, 356, 357–58; post-1945 rise of right in, 271, 315–24; post-Reconstruction conservatism in, 105–6; provincialism of, 99–100; pulling back from commitments of, 348; Republican 2000 victory in, 338–39; Republican dominance in, 197–98; Republican-Southern Democrat coalition in, 199–200; right’s dominance of, 44; Supreme Court in, 36, 200, 292, 338–39, 341, 388, 432, 442, 453; Tea Party in, 339; terror attacks on, 339; Whigs and Jacksonians in, 446–47. See also American Revolution; Constitution (U.S.)

Universal Declaration of Human Rights, drafting of, 459 universal rights: defense of, 380; opposition to, 15, 380, 423

universal suffrage, 93, 101, 226, 230–31 unmasking/unmaskers, 63, 313, 399–400, 405, 419, 458. See also suspicion, hermeneutics of urbanization, ethical problems of, 126

Utilitarianism, 86; Benthamite, 144, 316–17; historically relative, 14; opposition to, 380

Utopian globalism, 365

Utopian ideals, 308

Utopian myths, 240

Utopianism, 79, 324, 457; criticism of, 464; idealistic Christianity and, 297 values: equating of with price, 393; “reversible,” 249; social disagreement about, 393 values conservatism, 307–8, 409–10, 462; economic liberalism and, 315–16

Verein für Sozialpolitik, 224

Versailles Treaty, 244

via media, 406, 407–8

Vichy France, 173–74, 432; collapse of, 267; conservatives after collapse of, 270; hard right in, 434–35; National Revolution of, 445–46

victimhood theme on hard right, 351–52

Vietnam War protests, backlash against, 293 violence, political and physical, 240–41

voter-suppression, 413–14

Wagner Act, 289

wealth: power of, 43, 419, 420, 421, 426; redistribution of, 461, 273

Weimar Republic, 44; conservatism in, 186, 191–92; conservatives backing armed opposition to, 60; constitutional disputes in, 256; criticism of, 247; fall of, 436; parliamentary authority in, 187; political parties of, 191–94 welfare capitalism, 269, 279, 321, 416

welfare state, 90, 97, 324; right-wing objections to, 399

welfarism, 363, 416

Western-Christian conservatism, recasting of, 303–5

Western civilization: decline of, 244–45, 349–50, 436; spiritlessness of, 305–6

Westphalian system, 18
Whigs (American), 446–47; anti-Jacksonian, 446; emergence of, 98; liberal conservatism of, 98–99
Whigs (British), 445; combining liberal and conservative elements, 55; competition among, 81–82; concept of liberty of, 103; democratic Jacksonians and, 99–101; factionalization of, 104; as moral and cultural improvers, 101–2; opposing boundless expansion, 99; representing oligarchy, 86–87; resistance to modernity of, 102; right-wing, 96–97; as "vermin," 131

Whites backlash, 291–92

Wholes, 121

Wilhelmine Reich, 44, 45; authorities in, 187; collapse of, 191; conservatives in, 92, 186, 189; cross-alliances in, 93–94; government of, 121 withdrawal to excellence, 206

worker’s compensation, 177 working class, 344–45, 358; conservative appeal to, 198; demands of, 94, 456; discontented, 7, 445; franchise extended to, 208; populists and, 357; radicalism of, 95, 442; right’s fear of, 231; as weapon against liberals, 239–40, 464; winning votes of, 344–46, 358

World War I: British conservatives and, 179–80; as evidence of failed liberal orthodoxy, 242–43; as liberal suicide, 249
World War II, end of, 267

xenophobia, in France’s hard right, 346–47

Young Americans for Freedom (YAF), 319
Young England Tory, 452
Young Plan, 194