

CONTENTS

Introduction	1
1 Engendering Islamic Studies	17
DUDE	61
2 Citing Islamic Studies	65
Navigating Omissions	110
3 Representing Islamic Studies	114
Roe Reversal	138
4 Professing Islamic Studies	142
Conclusion: A Beginner's Guide to Eradicating Sexism in Islamic Studies	165
Acknowledgments	197
Appendix: A Note on Method	201
Further Reading	211
Index	215

Introduction

IN 2007, SHORTLY after my first book was published, I spoke about gender and Qur'an interpretation at Loyola University in Chicago. During the Q&A, an audience member objected that my feminist critique imposed a Western perspective. Did I know about William Chittick's book The Tao of Islam, which argues for Islam's balanced treatment of the masculine and the feminine? I responded that I found the book important but unpersuasive for my purposes. I also pointed out that it was written by Sachiko Murata; Chittick is her husband. In turn, the questioner offered a compromise: they both wrote it. Actually, they didn't.<sup>1</sup>

Attributing women's scholarly achievements to men is a time-honored practice that spans fields and disciplines.<sup>2</sup> It is but one example of how sexism and misogyny thrive in the academy.<sup>3</sup>

1. Sachiko Murata, The Tao of Islam: A Sourcebook on Gender Relationships in Islamic Thought. Foreword by Annemarie Schimmel (Albany: SUNY Press, 1992). Murata and Chittick did, however, co-author another book that may have been the source of the questioner's confusion. For more on that book, and the reflex to attribute collaborative work solely to men, see Chapter 4.

2. For one example, see Kishonna Gray, "#CiteHerWork: Marginalizing Women in Academic and Journalistic Writing," December 28, 2015, <http://www.kishonnagray.com/manifestmy-reality/citeherwork-marginalizing-women-in-academic-and-journalistic-writing>.

3. Danica Savonick and Cathy Davidson, "Gender Bias in Academe: An Annotated Bibliography" summarizes the findings of dozens of studies, <http://blogs.lse.ac>

Discrimination occurs in its upper echelons, as men—especially straight, white, abled, cis men—are disproportionately hired into tenure-track jobs, tenured, promoted, given named chairs, and awarded prestigious lectureships. At the other end of the higher education spectrum, women are overrepresented in the gig academy, the “insecure and poorly paid” adjunct jobs that now make up close to three-fourths of instructional positions.<sup>4</sup> The contingency crisis itself reflects the changing demographics of the academy. As more white women and people of color of all genders have earned doctorates and pursued scholarly careers, the security and prestige attached to being a professor has declined.<sup>5</sup> This is not coincidental, nor, as Tressie McMillan Cottom points out, are its effects equally distributed.<sup>6</sup> The growth in tenure-ineligible positions in centers, programs, and areas deemed peripheral to the university

---

.uk/impactofsocialsciences/2016/03/08/gender-bias-in-academe-an-annotated-bibliography/(updated 2017); see also Kathleen E. Grogan, “How the Entire Scientific Community Can Confront Gender Bias in the Discipline,” Nature Ecology and Evolution, 3, 2019: 3–6, <https://www.nature.com/articles/s41559-018-0747-4.pdf>. The short pieces collected in “The Awakening: Women and Power in the Academy” (The Chronicle Review, April 6, 2018, B1–B24) traverse disciplines.

4. This phrase already appears in a study written decades ago. Nadya Aisenberg and Mona Harrington, Women of Academe: Outsiders in the Sacred Grove (Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1988), 54. On women as adjuncts, see also Sekile M. Nzinga, Lean Semesters: How Higher Education Reproduces Inequality (Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2020), 15, 133–37, 151.

5. Lara Deeb and Jessica Winegar discuss the way “academic minefields” in Middle East/North Africa (MENA) anthropology relate to “the broader loss of professorial legitimacy in the United States” in Anthropology’s Politics: Disciplining the Middle East (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2016), 15 ff.

6. On the structural effects of anti-Black racism in adjunct hiring, see Tressie McMillan Cottom, “The New Old Labor Crisis,” Slate, January 24, 2014, <https://slate.com/human-interest/2014/01/adjunct-crisis-in-higher-ed-an-all-too-familiar-story-for-black-faculty.html>. See also Joseph Fruscione and Kelly J. Baker, “Introduction,” in Fruscione and Baker, eds., Succeeding Outside the Academy: Career Paths beyond the Humanities, Social Sciences, and STEM (Lawrence: University of Kansas Press, 2018), 1–7 at 3.

accounts for some disparities.<sup>7</sup> Humanities programs, in which men constitute a smaller proportion of faculty than in STEM fields, are shrinking or are threatened across the United States. Faculty positions are being eliminated. Professional vulnerability, like caregiving duties and service obligations, is unequally distributed.<sup>8</sup>

There seems to be a paradox. Academia has a reputation as a bastion of progressive values, a haven for feminists and other impractically utopian social justice advocates. But despite loud claims that conservative speech is being suppressed, those under threat from repressive policies limiting academic freedom tend to be on the left. And in its mundane practices, the academy remains thoroughly, if unevenly, (cis)sexist as well as classist, racist, ableist, and homophobic.<sup>9</sup> As Sekile Nzinga observes, “the structural inequities” of contemporary academic life are “encapsulated within and often hidden from our sight by the resilient enshrinement of the university as a fundamentally progressive institution.”<sup>10</sup>

Islamic studies, an amorphous field crossing area studies, philology and textual studies, religious studies, and theology, is inescapably shaped by the contemporary academy, with its endemic

7. Such fields include women's and gender studies and ethnic studies, Black studies, and critical race studies. Cottom, “The New Old Labor Crisis,” and Nzinga, Lean Semesters, 57, 71–75, 80–85.

8. See, e.g., Social Sciences Feminist Network Research Interest Group, University of Oregon, “The Burden of Invisible Work in Academia: Social Inequalities and Time Use in Five University Departments,” Humboldt Journal of Social Relations, 39, 2017: 228–245. An important early study of this phenomenon is Shelley M. Park, “Research, Teaching, and Service: Why Shouldn't Women's Work Count?,” The Journal of Higher Education, 67:1, 1996: 46–84.

9. Places to begin with this extensive literature include Lorgia García Peña, Community as Rebellion: A Syllabus for Surviving Academia as a Woman of Color (Chicago, IL: Haymarket Books, 2022); Deborah L. Rhode, “Women in Academia,” in Women and Leadership (New York: Oxford University Press, 2017), 95–110; and Nicole Brown and Jennifer Leigh, eds., Ableism in Academia: Theorising Experiences of Disabilities and Chronic Illnesses in Higher Education (London: University College London Press, 2020).

10. Nzinga, Lean Semesters, 12.

precarity, hyperattention to productivity, and fetishization of metrics as well as its sexist norms. Yet even as it shares patterns with other fields and disciplines, the gender politics of Islamic studies are distinctive. The incident at my lecture illustrates the complexities of talking about women and gender in Islam. My interlocutor, a brown man from the local community, held that I, a white academic visitor, was inappropriately pushing a Western feminist agenda when Islamic gender complementarity was the answer. Although that was not my aim, he was not wrong to push back. The gender politics of Islam in the U.S. and globally are also always racial politics (and conversely, the racial politics are deeply gendered). As a white person and an American citizen, I benefit in numerous ways from the racist and colonialist status quo.<sup>11</sup> Deployments of liberal feminism against Muslims do real harm, helping justify military invasions overseas and expanded surveillance at home.<sup>12</sup> At the same time, his insistence that Muslim women's roles are sacrosanct in a way that, say, political norms are not—he agreed that electoral democracy, despite being a Western import, was compatible with Islam—is itself worth questioning and historicizing. And the fact that we were both Muslim, and I was younger and a convert, meant he felt free to encourage me to embrace what he saw as a more religiously authentic perspective on gender issues.

Conversations about women and Islam, as well as gender and sexuality in Islam, have only become more charged in subsequent years. In America, broad cultural shifts have increased awareness and acceptance of gender beyond the male-female binary and normalized same-sex marriage and, to a lesser extent, a range of queer sexualities. There is also rising backlash to these changes alongside a frightening curtailment of reproductive autonomy. Scholars who are nonbinary and/or trans are becoming a more visible presence in Islamic studies. In this book, my focus is mostly on women, with occasional reference to nonbinary scholars, as I discuss in more detail in the methodological appendix. I recognize, though, that women is not and never has been a natural and universal category, and gender is by no means the only useful lens through which to understand academic bias, discrimination, and privilege. I make a point of discussing, for example, the overrepresentation of white and non-Muslim women in many contexts. However, in addition to its salience as a potential site of feminist solidarity, gender is a particularly meaningful category when analyzed in conjunction with scholarship on women, gender, and sexuality.

11. For an exploration of white convert privilege, especially for men, in Muslim religious organizations, see Mahdi Tourage, "Performing Belief and Reviving Islam: Prominent (White Male) Converts in Muslim Revival Conventions," Performing Islam, 1:2, 2013: 207–226 and Walaa Quisay, Neo-traditionalism in Islam in the West: Orthodoxy, Spirituality and Politics (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 2023). An account of white converts in academic Islamic studies remains to be written. I suspect that as the children and grandchildren of post-1965 immigrants to the U.S. enter the profession, and as the proportion of Black scholars increases, we make up a diminishing proportion of Muslims in the field.

12. See Rafia Zakaria, Against White Feminism: Notes on Disruption (New York: W. W. Norton, 2021).

Conjoined with the troubled cultural politics of gender and sexuality in the contemporary United States is the long-standing hypervisibility of women and gender in Islam as a topic of interest. Everyone from Islamophobic politicians to local interfaith group members to lay Muslims has perspectives and preconceptions and strong feelings. And because of the salience of such issues to contemporary life, as well as the interplay of social media and public scholarship, a lot of academic conversations on these topics cross over, sometimes for good, sometimes for ill. Even where the conversation is mostly confined to specialized publications and academic contexts, conversations on women and gender are fraught. Sometimes, the topics are avoided or treated as undeserving of serious scholarly attention. Sometimes, people take them up superficially, without engaging the substantial work that others—mostly others who aren't men—have done over the decades. Though many factors play a role, gender bias within academic Islamic studies is a crucial part of the story. Sexist bias and its detrimental effects on scholars and scholarship are the subject of this book, which aims to lay the groundwork for productive conversations about, and transformative approaches to, the gender politics of academic Islamic studies.

Islamic studies has been shaped by histories and contemporary manifestations of colonialism and imperialism as well as anti-Muslim hostility in myriad forms, in and beyond the United States, where I am based and where I focus my analysis. I began working on this book casually during the lead-up to the 2016 presidential election and in earnest after Donald Trump was inaugurated. By the time I submitted this manuscript past the halfway mark of Joe Biden's presidency, debates over putting Muslims in camps or making us register seemed a bit like a fever dream. Yet the political situation for American Muslims remains somewhat precarious, especially those from or with heritage ties to places perceived as threats to U.S. security interests. It falls outside the scope of this book to catalog these effects or predict their long-term trajectory. I can only note the fast-moving and complicated rhetorical and political dynamics that shape scholarship and teaching, including the emerging restrictions on what can be taught about gender, race, and sexuality in a variety of public and private institutions. Even as some things about the academy remain stubbornly resistant to change, colleges and universities across the country are undergoing significant and rapid transformation, both for good and for ill.

The United States academy is, of course, not hermetically sealed off from the rest of the world. Ideas, texts, and money cross borders. So do people, some more easily than others. Scholars born elsewhere train here. Scholars trained elsewhere teach here. Transnational collaborations are less common than some might wish but they are far from rare. Key European publishers have New York branches. American scholars publish in German journals, though nearly always in English. The Fulbright Program sends American scholars to Egypt and Indonesia and sponsors students and scholars from there to come to the U.S. Given that a PhD from an American institution is an advantage in some job markets, its norms matter. To the extent that English language scholarship dominates global academic Islamic studies, and its conferences and publishers have prestige, the U.S. has an outsized role. Non-anglophone scholars and scholarship are often neglected or excluded, especially in certain subfields. Discrimination here reverberates globally.

Still, higher education within the U.S. is highly stratified and internally differentiated to the point that generalizations about the American academy are suspect.<sup>13</sup> Elite private research universities and selective liberal arts schools operate differently from community colleges and large public institutions. And within the same school, faculty working conditions can diverge sharply. Tenured faculty teaching two courses per semester and adjuncts teaching 4/4 loads on annually renewable contracts have little common ground.

One factor distinguishing the U.S. from other Western academies is its demographics. For example, in North America, a substantially larger proportion of Islamic studies scholars is Muslim than in most of Europe—though substantially less than, say, in Iran or Indonesia.<sup>14</sup> Though too many events and publications

13. Raewyn Connell notes wide variation in practices among institutions within and among countries but concludes that “there is a great deal of overlap in what different universities and their workers actually do.” The Good University: What Universities Actually Do and Why It’s Time for Radical Change (London: Zed, 2019), 5.

14. I could not find firm statistics on the proportion of Muslims in Islamic studies or within religious studies, but the increase in recent decades is obvious and, for some, distressing. For one perspective, see Omid Safi, “Reflections on the State of Islamic Studies,” Jadaliyya, July 21, 2022, <https://www.jadaliyya.com/Details/30175/Reflections-on-the-State-of-Islamic-Studies>. Though it tracks a different population, Deeb and Winegar’s study of Middle East/North Africa-focused anthropologists in the U.S. academy estimates “an approximately 25 percent increase in region-related scholars”—which they gloss as “those with heritage ties to MENA”—“since the late 1960s” and “that at least 40 percent of those in PhD programs in the United States today are region-related” (Anthropology’s Politics, 7). They also observe that “today, the subfield [of MENA anthropology] is 61 percent female and 39 percent male, with a notable increase in the number of women since 1990” (8). In continue to exclude Black scholars, it is unusual to have an Islamic studies conference or volume in the U.S. that is all white or comprised entirely of non-Muslims. Consequently, the gender politics of academic Islamic studies are affected by and inflected with the gender politics of heterogeneous American and global Muslim communities. These dynamics shape the production and reception of scholarship on women, gender, and Islam.

The study of Islam and Muslims has always been political. Although one cannot reduce area studies to an “epiphenomenon of the Cold War” or Orientalism to an epiphenomenon of colonialism, early philological studies were often facilitated by European occupation of places where Muslims lived.<sup>15</sup> Numerous postwar anthropologists were funded by Cold War money; today, comparison, Eyal Clyne estimates around 150–300 Israeli scholars of the Middle East/Arabs/Arabic/Islam, “almost all Jewish, and mostly men” (Orientalism, Zionism and Academic Practice: Middle East and Islamic Studies in Israeli Universities [Abingdon and New York: Routledge, 2019], 17). For the United Kingdom, see Alison Scott-Baumann, Mathew Guest, Shuruq Naguib, Sariya Cheruvallil-Contractor, and Aisha Phoenix, Islam on Campus: Contested Identities and the Cultures of Higher Education in Britain (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2020), 171. On Islamic theology in the German university system, see Jan Felix Engelhardt, “On Insiderism and Muslim Epistemic Communities in the German and US Study of Islam,” The Muslim World, 106:4, 2016: 740–758. According to Irene Schneider, in 2018 women held five of twenty-three professorships in Islamic theology at seven distinct institutions (21.7%), slightly lower than women’s 25% share of such positions across disciplines. The numbers are too small for the difference to be statistically significant. Schneider, “Gender Equal Islamic Theology in Germany,” in Dina El Omari, Juliane Hammer, and Mouhanad Khorchide, eds., Muslim Women and Gender Justice: Concepts, Sources, and Histories (New York: Routledge, 2020), 62–85 at 78.

---

15. Zachary Lockman, Field Notes: The Making of Middle East Studies in the United States (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2016), 258 (see also xii, x); Ursula Wokoeck, German Orientalism: The Study of the Middle East and Islam from 1800 to 1945 (London: Routledge, 2009), 86, 218–9. On the intertwining of scholarly, missionary, and imperial interests, see Avril A. Powell, Scottish Orientalists and India: The Muir Brothers, Religion, Education, and Empire (Woodbridge, Suffolk: The Boydell Press, 2010).

it's anti-terrorism grants.<sup>16</sup> Dismissive talk of identity politics, which Reni Eddo-Lodge defines as “a term now used by the powerful to describe the resistance of the structurally disadvantaged,” is largely absent when ROTC cadets study Arabic and Islam in preparation for possible deployment.<sup>17</sup> Instead, those comfortable with the status quo invoke the ideal of disinterested pure scholarship when those from marginalized and minoritized backgrounds contest it.

Issues of insiders and outsiders bedevil other fields as well. Divisions between scholars and practitioners, or academics and activists, are inseparable from debates over objectivity, feminism, and other pre-commitments.<sup>18</sup> Religious studies' wrangling over these issues is conditioned by its history of boundary struggles with theology. The study of Islam has become a key place where those uncomfortable with the necessarily political implications of scholarship have found their nemeses. Some criticisms of Muslim feminist work, for instance, come from committed secularists skeptical about normative projects. Yet other critics are Muslim men who locate themselves simultaneously within academia and within a scholarly tradition, usually Sunni. Muslim men aren't uniquely patriarchal, of course. Throughout this book, I show how various androcentric and misogynistic academic practices overlap with each other and sometimes align with white supremacist norms and discourses.

Four chapters illustrate the interconnected ways that sexism functions in academic Islamic studies. Chapter 1 shows how

16. Deeb and Winegar, Anthropology's Politics.

17. Reni Eddo-Lodge, Why I'm No Longer Talking to White People about Race (London: Bloomsbury, 2017), 215.

18. See, e.g., Aisha M. Beliso-De Jesús, “Confounded Identities: A Meditation on Race, Feminism, and Religious Studies in Times of White Supremacy,” Journal of the American Academy of Religion 86:2, 2018: 307–40. After 9/11, according to Deeb and Winegar, “MENA became not just one, but the primary lens through which anthropology's tensions were reproduced, navigated, and debated” (Anthropology's Politics, 140–41).

subfields within Islamic studies are gendered, by which I mean both that they are numerically skewed in terms of who's in them and that they are treated as masculine or feminine—with work on women and gender consistently relegated to the periphery of Islamic studies. Chapter 2 looks at the citational politics of recent work, showing how despite the remarkable growth and depth of scholarship on Islam and gender, men continue to overlook scholarship by people who aren't men, even in work that purports to discuss gender issues, especially when it touches on the Muslim textual/intellectual tradition. Chapter 3 looks at public scholarship and representation in the media, considering the dynamics that both encourage scholars to talk about Islam and Muslims to broader audiences and make such engagements perilous for women, especially when the topic is gender or sexuality. Chapter 4 discusses curricula, noting widespread exclusions of women's scholarship and gender as a topic in syllabi while acknowledging that the classroom is a space where sustained, transformative learning can occur. Short interludes between the chapters provide glimpses into these broader dynamics and the feelings they engender, including irritation, frustration, disappointment, and rage. A conclusion proposes practical strategies to help those who research and write and speak and teach about Islam and Muslims avoid some of the sexist pitfalls described in this book.

The inclusion of such strategies, however, is not meant to imply that our problems will be solved if only each of us tries harder. Heroic individual exertion is not a panacea for structural problems. Second wave feminist Marilyn Frye used the image of a birdcage to describe the interconnected elements of an oppressive structure. Study any particular wire as long as you like; you'll conclude that it doesn't stop the bird from flying away. One glance at the whole, however, suffices to show how the bird is trapped.<sup>19</sup> The metaphor aptly captures women's disadvantage in academic contexts.<sup>20</sup> As Frye observes, “the locus of sexism is primarily in the system or framework, not in the particular act.”<sup>21</sup>

19. Marilyn Frye, "Oppression," in The Politics of Reality: Essays in Feminist Theory (New York: Crossing/Ten Speed, 1983), 1–17 at 4–5.

The Woman Question in Islamic Studies describes, analyzes, and suggests ways of improving existing systems. Highlighting the intertwined ethical and intellectual harms that result from others’ failures to cite women and to engage work on women/gender, it provides an evidence-based discussion of how we do our scholarly work, how our current approaches hinder scholars who aren’t cis men and harm the scholarship produced, and how we can all do better.<sup>22</sup> One of its goals is simply improved awareness. As Kate Manne points out, there is “significant value in the social support itself” of women coming together, as well as in the “enhanced pattern recognition” that comes from “being forewarned about how misogyny works.”<sup>23</sup> Some scholars may not recognize the scope of the problem; calling their attention to harmful practices will suffice for them to adjust their own habits and to support broader transformation. Others may resist, doubling down on the spurious rhetoric of objectivity, relevance, and merit. “Misogyny is a self-masking phenomenon,” Manne notes, so “trying to draw attention to the phenomenon is liable to give rise to more of it.”<sup>24</sup> Still, if 20. For example, Chavella Pittman (“Race and Gender Oppression in the Classroom: The Experiences of Women Faculty of Color with White Male Students,” Teaching Sociology, 38:3, 2010: 183–196) and Jennifer Thompson (“The Birdcage: Gender Inequity in Academic Jewish Studies,” Contemporary Jewry, 39, 2019: 427–446) have used it to explain, respectively, the classroom experiences of women faculty of color and the constraints on professional advancement for women in Jewish studies.

21. Frye, The Politics of Reality, 19.

22. Sarah Imhoff described the pairing of an “ethical problem” and an “intellectual problem” as a way of thinking about all or mostly male collective publications. See Kecia Ali, Alison Joseph, Sharon Jacob, Sarah Imhoff, Toni Bond, Natasha Heller, and Stephanie Buckhanon Crowder, “Manthologies,” Journal of Feminist Studies in Religion. 36:1, 2020: 145–158 at 149.

23. Kate Manne, Down Girl: The Logic of Misogyny (New York: Oxford University Press, 2018), 239.

24. Manne, Down Girl, xix.

enough come on board, the steady accrual of individual efforts and policy changes will shift our professional defaults. I pretend no objectivity here. Although I wholeheartedly favor bending wires to let birds escape, I ultimately hope to abolish birdcages.

In this book, I share some personal stories. I recount events to the best of my recollection, relying on my own files, archives, and emails for corroboration. I invent nothing but I sometimes omit or obscure details to protect others' privacy. When reporting spoken comments or unpublished correspondence, I don't name those involved. When quoting or discussing published writing, I generally do. As for social media, I draw from my own tweets freely but quote others only with permission.

There are pluses and minuses to naming names. Either way, someone will object. In a scathing assessment of Islamic legal studies, Ayesha Chaudhry refers only obliquely to the works she discusses, although specialists will find them easily identifiable.<sup>25</sup> Some have criticized that decision. Speaking at a conference panel after Chaudhry's essay appeared, a male full professor deemed her work "dangerous" in its vagueness. When it was my turn to talk, I noted that another male full professor had just published an article that deemed my criticisms of similar phenomena, in which I named (tenured) authors, "dangerous."<sup>26</sup> Chaudhry erred by 25. Ayesha S. Chaudhry. "Islamic Legal Studies: A Critical Historiography." In Anver M. Emon and Rumea Ahmed, eds., The Oxford Handbook of Islamic Law (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2018), 5–44. On choosing not to cite specific figures, see also Lena Salaymeh, "Imperialist Feminism and Islamic Law," Hawwa: Journal of Women of the Middle East and the Islamic World, 17, 2019: 97–134 at 103–104.

26. Sherman Jackson, "The Alchemy of Domination 2.0," American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences, 35:4, 2018: 87–117 at 94. The lecture to which he refers is my Ismail Al Faruqi Memorial Lecture for the International Institute of Islamic Thought in November 2017 (available at IIITMedia's YouTube channel, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ai5XF-bP3KEis>). It is forthcoming with commentary as Kecia Ali, "Muslim Scholars, Islamic Studies, and the Gendered Academy: Contingent Reflections," in Ebrahim Moosa, ed., Contingency in Contemporary Muslim Theology: Madrasa Discourses (Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, forthcoming).

omitting references, leaving her claims unsubstantiated.<sup>27</sup> On the other hand, by naming scholars and referencing specific works, I made people “targets” of my “invective,” creating a “silencing effect” and a climate of fear for others who might be singled out.<sup>28</sup> We’re damned if we do, damned if we don’t. There’s no right way to do it because the problem is that we’re trying to do it at all. Any attempt to reckon with the damage done by the persistent devaluation of women’s scholarship gets derailed quickly by a turn to imagined consequences for those whose reputations might be besmirched if they are called to account for their omissions.<sup>29</sup>

In what follows, I have tried to walk a middle path. I provide references to my evidence in my analyses of scholarly inclusion and exclusion. Singling out specific works as examples of poor citation practices can, as Chaudhry suggests, give the impression

27. Sohaira Siddiqui, who offers a nuanced and thorough engagement with Chaudhry’s method and claims, criticizes her “basic failure to substantiate her argument with evidence and footnotes.” “Good Scholarship/Bad Scholarship: Consequences of the Heuristic of Intersectional Islamic Studies,” Journal of the American Academy of Religion, 88:1, 2020: 142–174 at 168. Ahmed El Shamsy also faults Chaudhry for failing to include “substantiating footnotes” in favor of “occasional anonymized examples.” “How Not to Reform the Study of Islamic Law: A Response to Ayesha Chaudhry,” in Intisar A. Rabb and Mariam Sheibani, eds., “Roundtable on Islamic Legal History and Historiography,” Islamic Law Blog, December 10, 2020, <https://islamiclaw.blog/2020/12/10/legalhistoryroundtable/>.

28. Jackson, “The Alchemy of Domination 2.0,” 87, 93, 94, 99. Although all the people I mention in the sources he cites are tenured men, Jackson writes of “the silencing effect that has already invaded the psychological space of numerous junior scholars and graduate students, male and female” (94). Won’t someone please think of the children!

29. Discussing only the work of securely employed associate and full professors has been my policy from the start of this book project, expressed clearly when I’ve spoken about the work, and adhered to, save a couple of unintentional lapses, in talks, blogs, and tweets. Still, some have claimed hyperbolically that I’m aiming to ruin people’s—by which they always mean men’s—livelihoods. I’m not. On the ways that attempts to hold men accountable often result in claims that the men are now due sympathy for having been injured, see Manne’s discussion of “himpathy” in Down Girl, 196 ff.

that the problem is individual malefactors rather than robustly self-reinforcing systems. I try to minimize this effect by showing how various forms of exclusion depend on and shore up other exclusionary practices. In analyzing book series and edited volumes, I emphasize patterns, while providing bibliographic details for reference. In other instances, as when I discuss syllabi from various data sets, I do not name faculty. Patterns matter alongside, and significantly constrain, the specific choices that individuals make. Yet some choices are at the very least questionable and deserve scrutiny. Also, not to put too fine a point on it, publications are by definition public. It says so right in the word. Still, the objective is not to apportion blame but to call our attention to existing norms and use this increased awareness to shift both individual and collective habits.

My discussions of publications and citations make no attempt at comprehensive coverage. I combine broad surveys with more focused analyses of a smaller set of texts. I rely mostly on qualitative analysis, accompanied by some quantitative reckoning with specific books, book series, and syllabi. Large-scale bibliometric analyses proved impractical for a variety of reasons, explained in the methodological appendix, but my examples are neither mere anecdote nor cherry-picked outliers. My findings here echo those in the statistically robust mixed-methods survey of gendered citation and author description in religious studies book reviews that Lolo Serrano and I conducted.<sup>30</sup> I encourage those who wish to contest my findings to demonstrate, with adequate evidence, that the imbalances I demonstrate aren't widespread, rather than simply claim that I've failed to meet some arbitrary standard of proof.

Islamic studies is a small field. I know many of those whose work I write about. In some cases, we are cordial acquaintances; in others, colleagues who have had long-standing, friendly relationships. A few have been advisors and mentors over the decades. I discussed my concerns and criticisms with several of them as I worked on this book. Reactions included chagrined acknowledgment, the abrupt severing of communication, and hostile rejoinders in person, online, or in print. As a tenured full professor, I am buffered from professional repercussions in ways that more precariously situated scholars, dependent on behind-the-scenes evaluation processes for hiring, publication, grants, and tenure, are not. It is precisely those vulnerabilities, magnified by increased reliance on algorithmic citation metrics, that make this work necessary.<sup>31</sup> I hope that even those who are unhappy about my analyses will understand my reasons for pursuing them.

30. Kecia Ali and Lolo Serrano, "The Person of the Author: Constructing Gendered Scholars in Religious Studies Book Reviews," Journal of the American Academy of Religion, 90:3, 2022: 554–578.

Though I have been, in Kelly Baker's words, "scorched-earth angry" about some of the phenomena I discuss, my aim is not to ostracize anyone.<sup>32</sup> Although I critique specific works, mentioning several of my own failures along the way, none of these problems is reducible to individual lapses. What matters is not the purity and perfection of any single person's practice or the failings of any one book or article. We must think in terms of patterns, not merely incidents. Collectivities, not just individuals. Systems, rather than only cases. Structures as well as choices. I have tried to depict the forest by means of a few well-chosen trees. I describe some specimens in detail, down to the veining on a handful of leaves. I do not suggest that those trees are diseased and must be uprooted, much less advocate wildfire or clear-cutting. Rather, I want to focus on what kind of soil allows those trees to flourish.

31. Focusing on search engine results rather than scholarly citations, Safiya Umoja Noble shows how algorithms amplify existing biases and magnify inequalities. See Algorithms of Oppression: How Search Engines Reinforce Racism (New York: New York University Press, 2018).

32. Kelly J. Baker, Sexism Ed: Essays on Gender and Labor in Academia (Chapel Hill, NC: Raven Publishing, 2018), xvi. Baker writes about "the structural sexism of the academy" (xix), using her experiences as a lens for telling a larger story about religious studies specifically as well as the U.S. academy broadly.

What happens when their roots commandeer more than their share of nutrients? When their canopies block other saplings' access to sunlight? I want to understand the unhealthy imbalances of the current landscape in order to imagine and to begin to cultivate a healthier, sustainable scholarly ecosystem in which all inhabitants can thrive.

I N D E X

As this book argues, indexes matter—which makes preparing one fraught. In working with David Luljak on this index, I have stuck closely to the policy and guidance of the Press, although there are inevitable gray areas. “A Note for Authors on Preparing the Index” has this to say about when people should be named:

Authors’ names in notes should be indexed only if the note includes some discussion of their work or viewpoint. Do not index authors/titles in the bibliography. Names in prefaces or forewords may be indexed, but only if they have something to do with the subject matter of the book, not just how the book came to be written.

It is unsaid but understood those who appear in the main text should normally appear in the index.

By my count, 174 women, 105 men, and three nonbinary scholars appear in this index.

- AAR. See American Academy of Religion
- Abbott, Nabia, 25, 25n28, 39, 39n70, 40, 41n76
- ‘Abd al-Rahman, Aisha, 91
- ‘Abduh, Muhammad, 97
- Abdulahadi, Rabab Ibrahim, 117
- Abdul-Khabeer, Su‘ad, 158
- abortion, 138–40
- Abou-Bakr, Omaima, 75n28, 92n80
- Abou El Fadl, Khaled, 103; Reasoning with God, 79, 81–84, 90, 98–99; Routledge Handbook of Islamic Law, 36
- Abu-Lughod, Lila, 54, 157
- Abu Zayd, Nasr Hamid, 26n30
- academia: diverse conditions in, 7; inequitable practices within, 194–95; progressive and conservative values in, 3; structural inequities of, 2–3, 10–11, 13–14, 28; transnationalism in, 6–7. See also critique; faculty; hiring practices; peer review; public scholarship; sexism and misogyny
- adjunct faculty, 2, 7, 42, 179, 185, 191, 195. See also scholars (unaffiliated/contingent)
- Aeon* (magazine), 83
- al-Afghani, Jamal al-Din, 97
- Afshar, Ariana, 138
- Ahmad, Ahmad Atif: Pitfalls of Scholarship, 80–82, 84, 84n, 100–101, 210; Routledge Handbook of Islamic Law, 36
- Ahmad, Irfan, 25

- Ahmad, Mumtaz, Observing the Observer, 19, 21–22
- Ahmed, Leila, 68, 124–25; Women and Gender in Islam, 65–66, 68–69, 147
- Ahmed, Rumea: The Oxford Handbook of Islamic Law, 36; Sharia Compliant, 79, 81, 83–84, 90, 94–98, 100, 104, 109
- Ahmed, Sara, 71
- Ahmed, Shahab, 24, 25, 103–5, 141; What Is Islam? 68–69, 80–85, 105–6
- Aisha bint Abi Bakr, 91, 102, 143
- al-Azhar University, 97
- Ali, Ayaan Hirsi, 133
- Ali, Kecia: Imam Shafi'i, 77n34; The Lives of Muhammad, 78–79, 210; Marriage and Slavery in Early Islam, 55, 77n34, 175; Sexual Ethics and Islam, 55, 103–4
- all-male panels. See manels
- Al Rawiya, 96–97
- Altalib, Hamada, 205–6
- American Academy of Religion (AAR), 121, 190n, 203–4; Committee on Public Understanding of Religion, 121
- American Islam* (Cambridge Companions series), 29, 31
- American Islam subfield, 30–31
- American Journal of Islam and Society* (formerly American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences), 47
- Amin, Qasim, The New Woman, 86
- Anderson, Benedict, 102
- Anderson, J.N.D., 72
- Anidjar, Gil, 25
- Andrews, Walter, 105
- Angelou, Maya, 184
- Ankara University, 17
- An-Na'im, Abdullahi, 72n19; What Is an American Muslim? 80, 82–84, 89–90, 100, 102, 109
- anthologies, 27n33. See also manthologies
- anthropology, academic discipline of, 8, 26–27, 47, 160
- Appiah, Kwame Anthony, 97
- Arabic language, 9, 43–44, 48, 154
- area studies, 3, 46–48
- Arendt, Hannah, 84, 92
- Asad, Talal, 25, 76n30
- Aydin, Cemil, The Idea of the Muslim World, 80–87
- Ayubi, Zahra, 135
- Azam, Hina, Sexual Violation in Islamic Law, 95n87
- Badran, Margot, 102–3
- Baker, Kelly, 15, 15n32, 18n
- Bakhtiar, Laleh, 99
- Barlas, Asma, 54, 82n49
- al-Battar, Khadija, 91, 94
- Bauer, Karen, 39n70, 57, 103–4; Gender Hierarchy in the Qur'an, 52n109
- Beard, Mary, 127
- Bearman, Peri, The Ashgate Research Companion to Islamic Law, 36
- Benjamin, Mara, 27
- Bennett, Clinton, The Bloomsbury Companion to Islamic Studies, 19, 22–23, 22n17, 32
- Berg, Herbert: Method and Theory in the Study of Islamic Origins, 40; Routledge Handbook on Early Islam, 40
- Bhojani, Ali-reza, Visions of Shari'a, 34n57
- bibliographies: as curation, 70; method for analyzing, 207–8; women's representation in, 20, 24, 26n30, 32–33, 61–64, 69, 74, 77, 84n, 94, 151. See also citations; endnotes/footnotes
- Biden, Joe, 6
- Black Muslim women, 131, 154. See also Muslim women of color
- Black scholars, 4n11, 8, 28n34, 59, 89, 108, 131, 177, 192

- Blair, Sheila, 106; Islam: A Thousand Years of Faith and Power, 151, 152
- blasphemy, 129
- Bloom, Jonathan, 106; Islam: A Thousand Years of Faith and Power, 151, 152
- blurbs. See endorsements
- Bohlander, Michael, Visions of Shari'a, 34n57
- Boko Haram, 124, 157
- book reviews, 14, 46–47, 48, 97, 104–5, 108, 190, 190n, 193. See also peer review
- Boston University, 117, 161n46
- Brill: Studies in Islamic Law and Society, 33–36; Texts and Studies on the Qur'an, 37
- Brooten, Bernadette, 56
- Brown, Jonathan A. C., Misquoting Muhammad, 79, 82, 84, 90–94, 97, 101–2
- Bucar, Liz, 158
- al-Bukhari, Muhammad, Sahih al-Bukhari, 91
- Bukhari, Zahid, 144–47; Observing the Observer, 19, 21–22
- Bulletin* (journal of Middle East Studies Association), 41
- Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies*, 48
- Bush, Laura, 123
- Buskens, Léon, Islamic Studies in the Twenty-first Century, 19, 23, 25–26, 26n29
- Butler, Judith, 193, 195
- Callimachi, Rukmini, 114–16
- calls for proposals, 174
- Cambridge Companions series, 28–31, 34
- Campus Watch, 163
- caretaking, 50–51
- Çelik, Zeynep, 58
- Center for Near Eastern Studies, University of California, Los Angeles, 58
- Chaudhry, Ayesha, 12, 31, 94, 99
- Chittick, William, 1, 105; Vision of Islam, 146–47
- Christianity: and anti-choice movements, 138–39; religious studies based on conceptions of, 158–59; and slavery, 115, 124
- citations, 70–109; counting, 187; cumulative effect (path dependency) of, 71–74, 76, 76n30, 183, 186; as curation, 70; ethical issues in, 186–87; gender bias affecting, 18, 52, 71–109, 182–87, 202–3; harms resulting from failures of, 73–74, 108, 183–84; methodological issues in studying, 201–10; peer review and, 70; professional implications of, 73–74, 108, 183–84; purposes of, 70–71; racialization of, 71, 74; recommendations for combating sexism in, 184–87; self-assessment of one's practices of, 184–87; of women's scholarship, 21–23, 26n29, 26n30, 74–109. See also bibliographies; endnotes/footnotes; indexes; women: main text mentions of
- #CiteBlackWomen initiative, 167, 187
- Classical Islamic Theology* (Cambridge Companions series), 28
- Clemens, Rachael, 206
- Cockayne, Daniel, 75
- Cold War, 8
- colleges. See academia
- colonialism/imperialism: Islamic studies shaped by, 6, 8–9; as Western status quo, 4
- Committee on Public Understanding of Religion (American Academy of Religion), 121
- comparative religion, 49–50
- concubinage, 112–13, 115. See also sexual slavery

- conferences/panels: economic constraints on attending, 28, 28n34; email etiquette when planning for, 181–82; gender and racial composition of, 8, 130n43, 131–32, 168, 175–81; Giorgio Levi Della Vida Award and, 58–60, 175; networks and, 176–77; organization and management of, 175; selection criteria for, 177–81
- conjugal violence. See domestic violence
- Connell, Raewyn, 7n13
- contingent faculty. See adjunct faculty
- converts to Islam, 4, 4n11, 25, 149
- Cooper, Brittney, 89
- Cottom, Tressie McMillan, 2
- Covid-19 pandemic, 172n12
- critique: awareness as a goal of, 11, 14; gendering of concept and practice of, 50–51; as goal of pedagogy, 154, 158–64; institutional/structural factors as target of, 13–16; within the Muslim community, 123–25, 133; objects of, 12–14, 13n28, 13n29; refusal or silencing of, 1, 12–15, 62, 76n30, 116–17, 136. See also peer review
- Crone, Patricia, 40, 58, 59, 106
- curation, 62, 70, 156. See also erasures; exclusion; gatekeeping; peer review
- curricula/syllabi: conflation of Middle East and Islam in, 48; considerations in designing, 143–44, 152–59, 162–63, 188–91; path dependency in, 148, 152, 188; reading material in, 142–43, 146–53, 190–91; for survey courses, 144–52; women and gender in, 10, 143–59, 188–91. See also teaching
- Curtis, Maria, 22, 22n17, 32
- Dabashi, Hamid, 25
- Daftary, Farhad, A History of Shi'i Islam, 77–78
- Dakake, Maria Massi, The Charismatic Community, 77–78
- Daneshgar, Majid, Deconstructing Islamic Studies, 19, 23–24
- Davary, Bahar, 44
- Deeb, Lara, 7n14, 47
- Delgado, Richard, 72
- DeLong-Bas, Natana, The Oxford Encyclopedia of Islam and Women, 150
- Denny, Frederick, An Introduction to Islam, 147–51
- Deo, Meera, 163, 163n51
- Der Islam* (journal), 46
- D'Ignazio, Catherine, Data Feminism, 75
- diminishment of women's scholarship, 45, 82n49, 89, 99–109, 132n45. See also erasures; exclusion; marginalization
- Dion, Michelle, 202
- Dobbs v. Jackson, 138–39
- domestic violence, 51, 69, 91, 93, 94, 99, 157
- Donner, Fred, "Who's Afraid of Shari'a Law?," 61–64, 81, 86, 98, 109
- Dorroll, Courtney M., Teaching Islamic Studies in the Age of ISIS, Islamophobia, and the Internet, 19n5
- Duke University, 142
- early Christianity, scholarship on, 56
- Eddo-Lodge, Reni, 9
- edited volumes, 27–31, 34–40, 57–60, 208–9. See also manthologies
- editors: gender of, as influence on selected authors' gender, 27–31, 34–40, 57, 59–60; role of, in peer review process, 169–70, 173–74; strategies for, to achieve gender balance, 173–74
- education. See academia; teaching
- El-Badawi, Emran, Communities of the Qur'an, 39
- Eltantawi, Sarah, 95; Shari'ah on Trial, 95n87
- email, 181–82
- Emon, Anver, 97–98, 100; The Oxford Handbook of Islamic Law, 36
- Enayat, Hadi, 25
- Encyclopedia of Women and Islamic Cultures*, 22, 22n15, 161

- endnotes/footnotes: as curation, 70; method for analyzing, 207–8; styles of, 96; women's representation in, 20–21, 69, 84n, 93–94, 96, 98–101, 106, 109. See also bibliographies; citations; indexes
- endorsements, of scholarly books, 98, 109, 174, 183, 184
- erasures, 76, 99, 131. See also curation; diminishment of women's scholarship; exclusion; marginalization
- Ernst, Carl, Rethinking Islamic Studies, 19–21
- Esposito, John, Islam: The Straight Path, 147–52
- essentialism, 44, 85, 116–17, 133. See also generalizations; stereotypes
- ethnicity. See racialization
- exclusion: of Black scholars, 8; of female scholars by male scholars, 18–19, 57–60, 62, 168–69; of non-anglophone scholarship, 7; path dependency in, 70–72, 148; in publications, 26–40, 57, 168–69; systematic/structural practices of, 14, 167; of women and gender in Islamic studies, 10. See also curation; diminishment of women's scholarship; erasures; gatekeeping; marginalization
- expertise: gendered conceptions of, 49, 51, 64, 82n49, 97–98, 100, 108, 109, 131–32, 136; peer review process and, 169, 171; public intellectuals' sharing of, 126; public perceptions of, 120, 137; racialized conceptions of, 131, 136; utilization of others', 185
- Ezzat, Heba Raouf, 151
- faculty: adjunct/contingent/precarious, 2–3, 7, 15, 42, 179, 185, 191, 195; gender bias in treatment of, 2–3; in secure positions, 13n29, 28, 167–68; tenure process for, 192–93, 201; working conditions for, 7. See also academia; critique; hiring practices; public scholarship; scholars (unaffiliated/contingent)
- Fadel, Mohammad, 44n85, 103
- Fahmy, Khaled, 25
- Fakhreddine, Huda, 155
- Fatima bint 'Abbas, 91
- feminism: in academia, 3; on critique/caretaking binary, 51; diminishment of, 103–4; of fields and subfields of study, 88; Islamic, 53–54, 97, 103; and Islamic studies, 84; marginalization of, 51; Muslim, 9, 51, 53–55, 68, 72, 98, 110, 113, 124, 186; scholarship grounded in, 93, 95; Western/liberal, 1, 4; white, 66, 127, 128, 138
- feminization: of Africa, 88; of discourse, 44; of fields and subfields of study, 18, 19n5, 26, 45, 49–52; of scholars, 18
- Festschriften, 21, 35–36, 41n76, 41n77
- Fierro, Maribel, 93
- footnotes. See endnotes/footnotes
- Foucault, Michel, 25
- Frye, Marilyn, 10–11
- Gade, Anna, 51–52
- gatekeeping, 33, 58–60, 76, 135. See also curation; erasures; exclusion; marginalization; peer review
- Geertz, Clifford, 25, 105
- gender: assignment of, for research purposes, 209–10; as a category, heuristic value of, 5; cultural attitudes toward, 5; Islamic studies scholars' public communications concerning, 125–33; power linked to, 18; as topic of scholarship, 48, 51–58, 61, 63–69, 72, 78, 82, 84–89, 91. See also gender bias; men and masculinity; nonbinary scholars; sexism and misogyny; women
- Gender Balance Assessment Tool, 210

- gender bias: in academia, 18n; citation practices affected by, 18, 52, 71–109, 182–87, 202–3; conferences and, 174–81; in Islamic studies, 5, 17–60; peer review and, 169–74; in prestige, 49–58; in publications, 5, 11n22, 17–40, 58–60, 75–109, 168–74, 183, 193, 201–10; rhetorical manifestations of, 100–109; in student evaluations of teachers, 162–63; in subfields of Islamic studies, 26–40, 45, 49–58; in treatment of faculty, 2–3; in use of names and titles, 99–100, 132n45, 181. See also erasures; exclusion; gatekeeping; marginalization; sexism and misogyny
- gender studies, 46. See also women's studies
- generalizations, about Muslims and Islam, 54, 110–11, 126–27, 133, 156–59, 161. See also essentialism; stereotypes
- Giorgio Levi Della Vida Award, 17, 17n3, 58–60, 175
- Grabar, Oleg, 105
- Grewal, Zareena, Islam Is a Foreign Country, 76, 76n30
- Grunebaum, Gustave E. von, 105
- guidelines for eradicating sexism, 165–95; in citation practices, 182–87; in curricula, 188–91; in invitations, 174–82; in peer review, 169–74
- Haddad, Yvonne, The Oxford Handbook of American Islam, 31
- hadith studies, 91, 109n, 168–69
- Haider, Najam, The Origins of the Shi'a, 77–78
- al-Hakim, Su'ad, 105
- Hallaq, Wael, 24, 72n19
- Hammer, Julianne, 24; The Cambridge Companion to American Islam, 31
- Hanaoka, Mimi, 154–55
- Haneef, Suzanne, What Everyone Needs to Know about Islam and Muslims, 148–49
- Hashmi, Farhat, 151
- Hassan, Said Fares, Routledge Handbook of Islamic Law, 36
- Hawkins, Larycia, 117–18
- Hawwa: Journal of Women of the Middle East and the Islamic World*, 46
- Hermansen, Marcia, 21, 128n39
- Heschel, Susannah, 177–78
- Hillenbrand, Carole, Introduction to Islam, 152
- hiring practices, 15, 47–48, 178
- Hodgson, Marshall G. S., 25; The Venture of Islam, 142–43
- Hodgson, Phyllis, 142n
- honor crimes, 157
- Hopkinson, Nalo, 177
- Huffington Post* (newspaper), 116–17, 137
- Hughes, Aaron W., 24–25, 50–51; Deconstructing Islamic Studies, 19, 23–24; Muslim Identities, 150
- Humphreys, R. Stephen, Islamic History, 32
- Hyde, Georgie D. M., 84
- I.B. Tauris, Makers of Islamic Civilization series, 29, 29n43
- IIIT. See International Institute of Islamic Thought
- Imhoff, Sarah, 11n22, 73, 177–78
- imperialism. See colonialism/imperialism
- indexes: guidelines for/significance of appearance in, 74; method for analyzing, 207; women's representation in, 74, 77–79, 82–84, 88, 104, 106. See also citations; endnotes/footnotes
- intellect and rationality, linked to masculinity, 25, 49n99, 50, 78, 89–92, 97, 107–8

- International Association for the History of Religions, 17
- International Institute of Islamic Thought (IIIT), 21, 144–45, 147, 151–52
- International Journal of Middle East Studies*, 46
- International Qur'anic Studies Association, 204
- invitations, for scholarly works and functions, 174–82
- Iranian revolution (1979), 122–23
- IS. See Islamic State
- Islam: converts to, 4, 4n11, 25, 149; criteria of authority for commenting on, 130–33; defining, 42–44; diverse practices in, 63, 110–11, 133, 156–59, 162, 164; feminism within, 53–54, 97, 103; media representations of, 123–25; Middle East conflated with, 47–48, 127; public scholarship and, 114–33; racialized conceptions of, 4, 45; and slavery, 114–16; statement on sexual and gender ethics of, 110–13. See also Muslims; Muslim women; Sunni Islam
- Islam, Faisal, 144–47
- Islamic Awareness (website), 41n78
- Islamic Law and Society* (journal), 57n118
- Islamic legal studies, 30–37, 56–57, 79–80
- Islamic State (IS), 114–17, 120, 124
- Islamic studies: conceptions and definitions of, 19–20, 40–49, 84, 143; critical approaches to, 23–24 (see also critique); demographics of, 7–8, 7n14, 18; feminists and, 84; gender bias in, 5, 17–60; gender politics of, 4, 5–6, 8–11, 110; political context for, 8–9; public scholarship as component of, 121–33, 137n59; racialized conceptions of, 45; regional focus of, 7n14, 44–49, 153–55; scholarly disciplines contributing to, 3, 46–47; subfields of, 18, 26–40, 45–46, 49–58; teaching of, 19n5, 22, 142–64; text-centric approaches to, 3, 24, 32, 38, 43–46, 49, 52
- Islamic Studies* (journal; Islamabad), 46
- Islamic Studies* (journal; Oxford), 46
- Islamophobia, 5, 119, 125, 133, 137, 159
- Jackson, Jenn, 187
- Jackson, Sherman, 13n28
- Jalalzai, Sajida, 138, 139
- James, William, 101
- Joseph, Suad, Encyclopedia of Women and Islamic Cultures, 22n15
- Journal of Africana Religions*, 46
- Journal of Middle East Women's Studies*, 46
- Journal of Near Eastern Studies*, 41n76
- Journal of Shi'i Studies*, 47
- Journal of the American Academy of Religion*, 24, 46, 104, 148
- Journal of the American Oriental Society*, 46
- journals, 46–47
- Kadi, Wadad, 41, 41n77, 106
- Kadivar, Jamileh, 34n57
- Kane, Ousmane, Beyond Timbuktu, 80, 82–84, 88–89, 109
- Karim, Jamillah, 21
- Kassam, Tazim, 122
- Katz, Marion, 52, 75n28
- Keeler, Annabel, 39n70
- Keersten, Carool, 25
- Khadija bint Muhammad al-'Aqil, 88
- Khan, Sayyid Ahmad. See Sayyid Ahmad Khan (Cambridge Companions series)
- Khoja-Moolji, Shenila, 156–57
- Kinberg, Leah, 39n70
- Klein, Lauren, Data Feminism, 75
- Koopman, Colin, 25
- Krishnamurthy, Meena, 73, 93, 99

- Lamrabet, Asma, 82n49
Landecker, Hannah, 101
Lapidus, Ira, 65, 68–69
Lawrence, Bruce, 21, 21n12
Layish, Aharon, 35
lecturers. See adjunct faculty
Le Guin, Ursula K., 107
Leiden Manifesto, 75
Lincoln, Bruce, 25
Lockman, Zachary, 43n83
Lutz, Catherine, 26–27
- MacIntyre, Alisdair, 76n30
Mahdi, Muhsin, 25n28
Mahmood, Saba, 22, 26n30
Makdisi, John, “Islamic Law Bibliography,” 32–33
Makdisi, Marianne, “Islamic Law Bibliography,” 33
Malcolm X (Cambridge Companions series), 29 manels, 131, 180
Manji, Irshad, 133
Manne, Kate, 11, 119
manthologies, 11n22, 27, 27n33, 166, 180
Marey, Amany, 206
marginalization: critical attacks linked to, 136–37; of feminism, 51; of Muslim women, 18, 25; of Muslim women of color, 18, 25; of subfields of Islamic studies, 18, 26–40; of women and gender in Islamic studies, 18–20, 27–28, 51–58, 61–66, 68–69, 74, 76–109; of women as activists rather than intellectuals, 89, 97. See also diminishment of women’s scholarship; erasures; exclusion marital violence. See domestic violence
Mårtensson, Ulrika, 39n70
Martin, Richard: Approaches to Islam in Religious Studies, 20; Rethinking Islamic Studies, 19–21
Mattson, Ingrid, 35n60
Maududi, Abul A’la, 86
- McAuliffe, Jane Dammen, 38–39, 41, 82n49; Norton Anthology of World Religions: Islam, 147; The Qur’an, 39–40
McCutcheon, Russell, 50 media: expectations for scholars’ engagement with, 121–33; representations of Islam in, 123–25; representations of Muslims in, 10, 119–20, 123–25; representations of Muslim women in, 54, 119 men and masculinity: as beneficiaries of gender bias and discrimination, 2; critiques of Muslim feminist work, 9; defenses of, 13n29; as gatekeepers, 33–34; intellect and rationality linked to, 25, 49n99, 50, 78, 89–92, 97, 107–8; Islam associated with, 88; rhetorical celebration of, 100–109; subfields of Islamic studies associated with, 18, 44, 49–52, 56–57; as subject of study, 58. See also gender; gender bias; manels; manthologies Mernissi, Fatima, 54, 67
methodological issues, 12–16, 201–10. See also qualitative analysis; quantitative analysis
Middle East: Islam conflated with, 47–48, 127; as regional focus of Islamic studies, 7n14, 44–48, 153
Middle East studies, 23, 43n83
Middle East Studies Association, 41, 46
Mills, Margaret A., 105
Mir-Hosseini, Ziba, 34n57, 54, 72, 96, 97, 99; Men in Charge?, 98
misogyny. See sexism and misogyny
Mitchell, Sara McLaughlin, 202n
Momen, Moojan, 77n32
Montoya, Michael, 101
Moore, Diane L., 160n
Moosa, Ebrahim, 103–4
Moravec, Michelle, 135n51
Morgenstein Fuerst, Ilyse R., 48, 135, 137
Mott, Carrie, 75

- Muhammad* (Cambridge Companions series), 28–29
- Muhammad, Prophet, 91, 95, 111, 129, 151, 153, 160
- Mullen, Lincoln, 210
- Murata, Sachiko: The Tao of Islam, 1, 128; Vision of Islam, 146–47
- Musawah, 96
- Muslims: and abortion, 139–40; criteria of authority for commenting on, 130–33; critique within communities of, 123–25; defining, 42–44; diverse lives and experiences of, 54, 92, 116, 126, 133, 156–59, 162, 164; media representations of, 10, 119–20, 123–25; public scholarship and, 114–33; scholarship by, 7n14, 39n70, 47; and slavery, 114–16, 124; status of, in the United States, 6; stereotypes of, 120, 123, 125, 127, 138–39; terrorism attributed to, 139. See also Muslim women
- Muslim women: attacks on, for expression of their views, 116–19, 126–33; critique within communities of, 133; diverse lives and experiences of, 53–54, 156–59; engagement with/acknowledgment of (and failures thereof) scholarship of, 23, 25–26, 26n29, 26n30, 72; feminism of, 9, 51, 53–55, 68, 72, 98, 110, 113, 124, 186; marginalization of, 18, 25; media representations of, 54, 119; the Prophet Muhammad and, 78–79; status and role of, 4–5, 10; as topic of scholarship, 53–54, 65–69; underrepresentation of, 5; Western perceptions of the oppression of, 119, 122–23, 125, 127–28, 138–41, 157. See also Black Muslim women; Muslim women of color
- Muslim women of color: inequitable academic treatment of, 182, 192; marginalization of, 18, 25–26; risks facing, 126; teaching challenges facing, 163. See also Black Muslim women
- names and titles, 99–100, 132n45, 181
- Nana Asma'u, 88
- Nanji, Azim, Mapping Islamic Studies, 19–20, 25
- nationality. See racialization
- National Women's Studies Association, 124
- “Navigating Differences” statement, 110–13, 129
- Near Eastern studies, 45, 46
- networks: boundaries of scholarly, 68; citation practices affected by, 185; clerical, 53; conference organizers', 60, 176–77, 179; editors', 27–28, 171, 173; patronage, 53; professional significance of, 165
- New York Times* (newspaper), 114, 116
- Niass, Mariama (Mariame), 88
- Niass, Ruqayya, 87–88
- 9/11. See September 11, 2001, attacks
- nonbinary scholars, 5, 40, 56, 66n3, 82, 92, 94, 119, 169, 179, 181, 185, 208, 209
- non-Muslims: in Mughal India, 43; objectivity imputed to, 130; overrepresentation of, 78–79; publications by/citations of, 47, 92, 116, 130. See also non-Muslim women
- non-Muslim women: overrepresentation of, 5, 25–26, 84; publications by/citations of, 92–93. See also white women
- “Normativity in Islamic Studies” (roundtable discussion), 24
- Norton Anthology of World Religions: Islam, The*, 147
- Norton Critical Editions series, 39
- notes. See endnotes/footnotes
- Nussbaum, Martha, 21n12
- Nyang, Sulayman, Observing the Observer, 19, 21–22
- Nzinga, Sekile, 3, 28n34
- objectivity, in scholarship, 9, 11–12, 68, 108, 130, 141
- Omer, Atalia, 25, 50

- Oneworld, Makers of the Muslim World, 29
- Orientalism, 8, 76
- Oxford Bibliographies, 29n43
- Oxford Handbook of American Islam, The*, 31
- Oxford University Press, 152
- panels. See conferences/panels; manels
- Parks, Sara, 56
- path dependency: in academic discrimination and inclusion, 193–95; in citation practices, 71–74, 76, 76n30, 183, 186; in curriculum design, 148, 152, 188
- patriarchy: in academia, 166; American forms of, 139; Muslim women’s critique of, 53, 66, 67, 98, 124–25; perpetuation of, 99, 188; varieties of, 119; in Western study of Islamic law, 31
- Patton, Laurie, 121
- pedagogy. See teaching
- peer review: citation practices and, 70, 183, 187; Covid-19 pandemic’s effect on, 172n12; examples of, 52, 54–55, 135n52; recommendations for combating sexism in, 169–74; strategies for editors, 173–74; strategies for performing, 171–72, 172n13; strategies for recipients of, 170–71; tenure requirements and, 201. See also book reviews
- Peirce, Leslie, The Imperial Harem, 143
- Peters, Rudolph, 35; The Ashgate Research Companion to Islamic Law, 36; A Bibliography of Islamic Law, 1980–1993, 32–33
- philology, 3, 8, 45, 49, 66
- Picken, Gavin R., Islamic Law, 57n118
- Pink, Johanna, 39n70, 52n109
- Pittman, Chavella, 11n20
- plagiarism, 183, 187
- publications: academic significance of, 201; authorship of, 19–40; chronology as influence on gender representation in, 27, 30, 34–37; Covid-19 pandemic’s effect on, 172; critical evaluation of, 161–62; gender bias in, 5, 11n22, 17–40, 58–60, 75–109, 168–74, 183, 193, 201–10; in Islamic studies subfields, 26–40; journal, 46–47; as reading material for survey courses, 142–43, 146–53; structural factors influencing, 28; women and gender as topics in, 19–40, 22n17; women’s scholarship represented in, 19–40. See also bibliographies; citations; edited volumes; endnotes/footnotes; indexes; manthologies; textbooks; trade books
- public scholarship, 5, 10; attacks on women resulting from, 116–19, 126–33; audiences and contexts for, 133–37; criteria of authority for, 130–33; expectations for, 121–33, 137n59; gender bias in, 130–33; perils of, 119, 121–22, 126–33, 126n30, 135–37, 192
- Public Understanding of Religion, Committee on (American Academy of Religion), 121
- al-Qadi, Wadad. See Kadi, Wadad
- qualitative analysis, 14, 74, 79
- quantitative analysis, 14, 74–75, 79, 201–10
- Quraishi-Landes, Asifa, 90, 95, 95n87
- Qur’an, 66, 91, 93, 99, 103, 116
- Qur’an, The* (Cambridge Companions series), 29
- Qur’anic studies, 30–31, 37–40, 56–58
- Rabb, Intisar, 36; “Roundtable on Islamic Legal History and Historiography,” 37
- Rabia al-’Adawiyya, 151

- race: and academic inequities, 194; and composition of conference panels, 131, 180; and public scholarship, 120, 130–31; teachers' classroom experiences affected by, 1120, 163. See also Black Muslim women; Black scholars; Muslim women of color; whites and whiteness; white women
- racialization: of citations, 71, 74; in conceptions of expertise, 131, 136; in conceptions of Islam and Islamic studies, 4, 45
- racism: in citation practices, 15, 18; in email communications, 181–82; in institutional structures, 3, 15; and stereotypes of Islam and Muslims, 120, 124; in student behavior, 163. See also white supremacy
- Rafiq, Aayesha, 72n19
- Rahman, Fazlur, 105
- Rania (queen of Jordan), 151
- Rashid, Hussein, 156
- Ratib, Aisha, 101–2
- rationality. See intellect and rationality
- Raudvere, Catharina, Islam: An Introduction, 152
- Ray, Victor, 71–72, 76
- reason. See intellect and rationality
- Reed, Annette Yoshiko, 27
- Reinhart, A. Kevin, 26n30
- religion: category of, 160; gendering performed by, 110–11
- religious literacy, 160
- religious studies: Christian-centric foundations of, 158–59; disciplinary boundaries of, 9; feminization of, 45, 50; gender-focused scholarship in, 53; public scholarship as component of, 121, 126; role and conceptions of Islamic studies within, 3, 45–48, 153, 160–61
- Rippin, Andrew, 41n78, 82n49, 147
- Roche-Mahdi, Sarah, 20
- Roe v. Wade, 138
- Rooij, Laurens de, Visions of Shari'a, 34n57
- Rosenthal, Franz, 59
- Routledge Studies in the Qur'an*, 37–38
- Rumminger, Jana, Men in Charge? 98
- Rutgers University, 118
- Sabra, Adam, 105
- Sacred Writes, 121
- Safi, Omid, The Cambridge Companion to American Islam, 29, 31
- Salaymeh, Lena, 69
- Sanders, Paula, Communities of the Qur'an, 39
- Sands, Kristin, 39n70
- Sandwijk, Annemarie van, Islamic Studies in the Twenty-first Century, 19, 23
- San Francisco State University, 117
- Saudi Arabia, 127–28
- Sayeed, Asma, 75n28
- Sayyid Ahmad Khan* (Cambridge Companions series)
- Schacht, Joseph, 42
- Schimmel, Annemarie, 17–18, 23, 40, 41, 49–50, 58, 59, 65, 106, 125; Islam: An Introduction, 151–52
- scholars (unaffiliated/contingent), 42, 179, 185. See also adjunct faculty; faculty; public scholarship; women's scholarship
- scholarship. See academia; faculty; public scholarship; scholars (unaffiliated/contingent); women's scholarship
- September 11, 2001, attacks, 122–23, 128
- Serrano, Lolo, 14, 104
- sexism and misogyny: About El Fadl's publications on, 98; in attacks on women for their views, 116–19, 126–33; cautions about inadvertent perpetuation of, 135n52; persistence of, 165–66; practices of, 1–2, 9–11, 45–46, 100, 166–67; societal refusal to engage with, 119. See also

- sexism and misogyny (continued)
diminishment of women's scholarship; erasures; exclusion; gender bias; guidelines for eradicating sexism
- sexuality: illicit, 95–97, 95n87; "Navigating Differences" statement on, 110–13; as topic of scholarship, 120.
See also sexual slavery
- sexual slavery, 112–19
- al-Shafi'i, 97
- Shah, Mustafa, Tafsir, 38, 39n70
- Shaikh, Sa'diyya, 132–33
- Sha'rawi, Huda, 87
- shariah, 36–37, 86, 89, 95, 139
- Al-Sharmani, Mulki, Men in Charge? 98
- Shatzmiller, Maya, 76n29
- Sheedy, Matt, Identity, Politics and the Study of Islam, 19, 23–24
- Sheibani, Mariam, "Roundtable on Islamic Legal History and Historiography," 37
- Shepard, William, 147
- Siddiqui, Sohaira, Locating the Shari'a, 36
- Sinanović, Ermin, 145
- Sirry, Mun'im, New Trends in Qur'anic Studies, 39
- Sisters in Islam, 66
- slavery, 112, 114–17, 119, 124
- Smith, Jane, 21–22; The Oxford Handbook of American Islam, 31
- Smith, Jonathan Z., 25
- Smith, Wilfred Cantwell, 105
- Sobieraj, Sarah, 116, 126n30, 136–37
- Society for Biblical Literature, 204
- Solnit, Rebecca, "Men Explain Things to Me," 127
- Sonbol, Amira El Azhary, 76n29
- Spain, 33, 93
- Spectorsky, Susan, 35n60
- Spellberg, Denise A., Politics, Gender, and the Islamic Past, 142–43
- Spielhaus, Riem, 45n87
- Spivak, Gayatri, 92
- Stenberg, Leif, What is Islamic Studies? 19, 24–25
- stereotypes: as consideration in teaching, 155–59, 162; dehumanizing, 120, 139; of Muslim men, 120; of Muslims/Islam, 123, 125, 127, 138–39. See also essentialism; generalizations
- Stowasser, Barbara, 150
- Stratigakos, Despina, Where Are the Women Architects? 166
- Streisand, Barbra, 138
- students: assumptions of, 155–60, 162; evaluation of teachers by, 162–63, 193; learning outcomes for, 159–64
- Studies in Islamic Law and Society (Brill book series), 33–36
- Sufism (Cambridge Companions series), 29
- Sufism, scholarship on, 17, 21, 29, 45
- Sumner, Jane Lawrence, 202, 207, 210
- Sunni Islam, 9, 55, 90–91, 130
- SUNY Press, 152
- survey courses, 144–52
- Swartz, Merlin, 20
- Syeed, Najeeba, 90
- syllabi. See curricula/syllabi
- Taliban, 124, 138
- Taves, Ann, Religious Experience Reconsidered, 100–101
- teaching: challenges in, 155–59, 162–64; Christian theological schools' treatment of Islam, 22; goals of, 154, 158–64; of Islamic studies, 19n5, 22, 142–64; student evaluations of, 162–63, 193. See also curricula/syllabi; faculty
- tenure, 192–93, 201
- Terman, Rochelle, 125, 133

- terrorism, 9, 139, 152
Texas, 138
textbooks, 146–52, 166, 191–93
theology, 3, 9, 50
Thompson, Jennifer, 11n20
Thonemann, Peter, 27 titles. See names and titles
tokenism, 180–81
Tourage, Mahdi, 24n22
trade books, 191–93
Trump, Donald, 6, 119
Truschke, Audrey, 118, 126
Truthout (news site), 138
Tucker, Judith, 76n29
- universities. See academia
U.S. Supreme Court, 138
- Vasmaghi, Sedigheh, 34n57
veiling, 63n4, 63n5, 67, 86, 139, 153, 157–58, 161
violence, as topic of scholarship, 120.
See also domestic violence
- Wabash Center for Teaching and Learning, 144
wadud, amina, 54, 66n3, 66n4, 68, 82n49, 91, 93, 99, 125–26; Inside the Gender Jihad, 99; Qur'an and Woman, 66, 68, 150
Wahhabism, 98
Waines, David, 147
Wakin, Jeanette, 41–42
Waldman, Marilyn, 20, 21n12
Ware, Rudolph, III, *The Walking
Qur'an*, 80–83, 87–88, 108–9
Watt, W. Montgomery, 105
Weiss, Bernard, 35, 36
Welchman, Lynn, 72n19
Wheaton College, 118
Wheeler, Kayla, 154–55; “Black Islam
Syllabus,” 156
Whelan, Estelle, 41–42, 41n78 white feminism, 66, 127, 128, 138 whites and whiteness: and anti-choice movements, 138–39; assumed superiority of, 107–8, 131; attacks on non-whites and women by, 129;
institutionalization of, 72; terrorism attributable to, 139. See also white women
white supremacy, 9, 31, 139. See also racism
white women: as converts to Islam, 4, 4n11, 25; overrepresentation of, in
Islamic studies contexts, 5, 25–26,
39, 78–79, 84, 148; self-assessment of, 184–85. See also non-Muslim women
Wiley Blackwell Concise Companion to the Hadith, The, 168–69
Wilson, Jessica, 73, 93, 99
Winegar, Jessica, 7n14, 47
Winfrey, Oprah, 184
women: attacks on critiques made by, 1, 12–15, 62, 76n30, 116–17, 136;
diminishment of, 99–109, 132n45,
136; harassment and intimidation of, 116–19; main text mentions of,
25, 68, 74, 77, 78, 82–94, 96, 100–109,
151; marginalization of, in Islamic studies, 18–20, 27–28, 51–58, 61–66, 68–69, 74, 76–109; and shariah, 89.
See also critique; gender; gender bias; Muslim women; non-Muslim women; sexism and misogyny; white women; women’s scholarship
Women, Ethics and Islamic Knowledge online summer school, 51n106
#WomenAlsoKnowHistory initiative,
167
women’s scholarship: citations of, 21–23, 26n29, 26n30, 74–109; engagement with/acknowledgment of (and failures thereof), 1, 10, 11, 17–26, 40–42, 51–58, 61–64, 69–70, 72,
74–109, 174–75, 182–87; feminist, 93,

- women's scholarship (continued)
95; framing of, 74; national, racial, ethnic, or religious characteristics of, 74. See also bibliographies; citations; endnotes/footnotes; faculty; indexes; publications; scholars (unaffiliated/contingent); women: main text mentions of
- women's studies, 46, 47. See also gender studies
- Wood, Philip, What Is Islamic Studies? 19, 24–25
- Yacoob, Saadia, 75n28, 97
- Yan Izala, 88
- Yan Taru, 88
- Yazidi women and girls, 114, 116
- Yosif, Reima, 97
- Youssef, Olfa, 82n49
- Yousafzai, Malala, 157
- Zaman, Taymiya, 85
- Zaynab (granddaughter of Prophet Muhammad and Khadija), 78
- zina (illicit intercourse), 95–96, 95n87, 100
- Zine, Jasmin, 159
- Zomeño, Amalia, 76n29
- al-Zwaini, Laila, Bibliography of Islamic Law, 1980–1993, 32–33